—Breach of Contract.

———Contract Act, S. 73—Earnest money becomes part of purchase price when contract completed—Vendee's default entails forfeiture—Damages.

In a contract for sale of immovable property the deposit of earnest money is a guarantee for performance of the contract by the vendee and when the transaction goes forward it becomes part of the purchase price; if by default of the vendee the transaction falls through, the money is forfeited: A. I. R. 1926 P.C. 1, Foll. (Kemp, Ag. C.J. and Murphy, J.). DINANATH DAMODAR KALE v. MALVI MODI RANCHHODDAS & CO.

———Measure of, depends on facts of each case.

The decision of each case of damages for breach of contract depends on its peculiar terms as to the mode, place and time of performance. One case cannot be precedent for other unless terms are similar. (Tek Chand and Agha Haidar, JJ.). RATTAN LAL SULTAN SINGH v. TEKCHAND CHUNNI LAL.

———Fixing date of marriage after parties are free to marry implies promise to marry and is not ratification of prior agreement to marry which was void as parties could not contract valid marriage.

Where a man agreed to marry a woman (plaintiff) during divorce proceedings between her and her husband and after the divorce proceedings had gone through, and consequently the plaintiff became a free woman, the defendant (man) bought her a ring and actually arranged the date on which they were to be married:

Held: that when persons fix a day for their marriage it may be inferred that there is a promise of marriage. And one is not bound to take it as a ratification of a contract which in itself is void, and which, therefore, in law cannot be ratified by anything that can be subsequently done. ———Right to claim specific performance as well as damages—Omission to claim specific performance is no bar to claim damages.

Where performance of the contract is refused by defendant plaintiff is entitled to claim back the earnest money and damages, provided they are not penal. His omission to claim specific performance does not bar his right to claim damages. (B.B. Ghose and Panton, JJ.). NATHURAM BARMAN v. ULLUK CHAND BARMAN. 95 I.C. 700=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1041.

———Suit for damages—Performance of contract to be simultaneous—Each party must show his readiness and willingness to perform his part of the contract.

In all these cases where the performance of a contract is to be simultaneous and a suit is brought for damages for breach of contract, each party must show that he was ready to perform his part of the contract. For example, in a suit for damages for breach of a contract to sell and purchase, seller must show that he was able and willing to perform his part of the contract and the buyer must show that he was ready and willing to pay the price. ———Difference between contract rate and market rate on date of breach is the basis—Plaintiff pleading special measure must prove it.

When there is an available market for the goods, the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of the breach is the amount of the damages prima facie payable and when the plaintiff claims damages on any other special basis he must prove his case. (Spencer and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.). RAMALINGAM CHETTIAR v. GOKULDAS MADAVJI & CO. 97 I.C. 871=1926 M.W.N. 691= A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1021=51 M.L.J. 243.

———Cause of action based on breach of contract—Damages based on delay cannot be claimed.

Where the suit as framed is not one brought in tort for damages due to loss occasioned to the plaintiffs on account of the retardation in delivery but simply for compensation for the loss of the articles which were found missing, the action is founded on breach of contract and in no sense on tort based upon the delay and damages founded on delay cannot be claimed. (Bucknill, J.). M. & S. M. RY. CO. v. FIRM GOPAL RAI RAM CHUNDER. 94 I.C. 510= 1926 P H.C.C. 123=A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 273.

———Contract Act, S. 73—Plaintiff must mitigate loss—Vendor with right to re-sell at any time, on vendee's default to pay by due date need not re-sell immediately but must do so within reasonable time—Otherwise he can get damages only on basis of difference between contract and market rates at date of breach.

A plaintiff who sues for damages owes the duty of taking all reasonable steps to mitigate the loss consequent upon the breach and cannot claim as damages any sum which is due to his own neglect.

Where the vendor had the right to re-sell the goods at any time if vendees failed to pay and take delivery by certain date and where vendee made default.

Held: that the vendor was not bound to resell the goods immediately after the defaults but could do so within a reasonable time afterwards, but that in view of the persistent refusal of the vendees to take the goods and the falling state of the market, the vendors were bound not to delay in re-selling. Should the vendors make unreasonable delay, they can recover only damages on the ordinary basis of the difference between contract rate and market rate at date of breach. 19 All. 535, Diss. from. (*Shah, Ag. ———Contract Act, S. 73—Reasonable compensation is question of fact—If circumstances require so, no damages need be awarded for breach of contract to sell real property—Case-law discussed.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down for assessment of damages for breach of contracts to sell. The circumstances of each case have to be considered in deciding what is reasonable and proper compensation for the damage caused by a breach of contract. Under S. 73 the Court is not bound in every case to award damages on the basis of a difference between the price at the date of the contract and the market price at the date of the breach. If circumstances require so no damages need be awarded for breach of contract to sell real property where the vendor is not guilty of fraud. (Shah, Ag. C.J. and Fawcett, J.). ———Specific Relief Act, S. 21—Assignee of decree who resiles from contract may be made to pay price instead of damages.

There is no invariable rule that in cases relating to movable property damages only should be given. In a suit against a person who agreed to take an assignment of a decree the price which he promised to —Cause of Action.

———Contract Act, S. 23—No cause of action arises against person for merely financing appellants in appeal when costs could not be recovered from appellants.

Even if a person is known to have financed an appellant, it will not give a cause of action to the respondents to recover damages from the financer personally because they have been unable to recover their costs from the appellant. ———Specific Relief Act, S. 54—Water of certain tank by immemorial custom used by co-sharers for certain land only in proportion of their shares—Ownership of water is not independent of ownership of land—One co-owner using water for other land—Damage caused to other co-owners—They can sue for damages as well as for injunction to restrain unauthorised use.

Several co-sharers of an agraharam were entitled to the water of a tank in the same proportion which they owned land in the agraharam. It was customary from time immemorial to use the water of the tank for cultivating certain area of land described as "the wet ayacut under the tank." The water of the tank was not even sufficient for the wet ayacut. One of the co-sharers used the water of the tank to convert some of his dry land into wet land and thereby caused damage to the other co-sharers. The other co sharers sued for injunction as well as damages.

Held: that from immemorial usage must be implied an agreement that the water of the tank was to be used for the wet ayacut only. From the fact that the water was owned proportionately to the land it does not follow that the ownership of water was independent of the ownership of the land. The use of water for other land than the wet ayacut was illegal. Other co-owners can therefore get damages as well as injunction to restrain such use. It would be absurd to say that they should sue for partition of tank water and not for injunction. (Ramesam and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.). ———Breach of contract to pay money to a third person—No time for payment fixed—Cause of action for damages for breach arises when money is recovered from the party suing.

For a suit for loss or damage incurred by reason of the failure of a party to the contract to carry out his undertaking to pay money to a third person where no time is mentioned for payment, limitation runs from the time when the money was paid. ———Obstruction from taking water from well is continuing injury—Where damage consequent on an act is actionable rather than the act itself, every damage is actionable.

A cause of action, in respect of which a plaintiff is entitled to have the prospective damages assessed is distinct from a continuing cause of action, that is to say, a cause of action which arises from the repetition or continuance of acts or omissions of the same kind as that from which the action has been brought. Similarly, where the damage consequent on an act or omission rather than the act or omission itself is actionable, then, as the action is only maintainable in respect of the damage, or is not maintainable until the damage is sustained, an action will lie every time damage accrues from the act. 11 A.C. 127, Ref.

———Collector of Custom made to detain goods by representation made maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause—Damages caused by detention are recoverable.

When defendants through malice and without reasonable and probable cause make certain representation to the Collector and in consequence plaintiff's goods are detained under S. 19-A of the Sea Customs Act, plaintiff can recover damages caused on account of such detention of his goods. (Pearson, J.). ALBERT BONNAN v. IMPERIAL TOBACCO CO., LTD. 94 I.C. 444=30 C.W.N. 465= A.I.R, 1926 Cal. 757.

———Where party would have lost a claim apart from conduct of another man the other man is not liable.

Where a certain pro-note was accepted though it was void as contravening S. 26, Paper Currency Act (2 of 1910), and in discharge of that pronote the agent of the creditor forged another pronote and thus misled his principal into filing a suit on the forged pronote which was dismissed on that ground, and where the creditor did not seek the alternative claim on the consideration of the original pronote.

Held: that the loss of the creditor was not due to the forged pro-note but to his acceptance of his original pro-note and therefore the agent was not liable for the loss of the debt. (Coutts-Trotter, C. J. and Krishnan, J.). VEERASAMI PILLAI v. CHIDAMBARAM CHETTIAR. 92 I.C. 819= A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 894.

———Breach of Contract—Parties executing lease by unregistered letters—Plaintiff cannot claim damages as he is bound to tender document for defendant's signature nor for non-registration since he could get the letters registered.

Where plaintiff wrote to defendant terms of the lease which plaintiff accepted and defendant confirmed plaintiff's term by a letter in reply and where the plaintiff claimed damages upon the ground that the defendant had failed to grant him a lease.

Held : that the documents amount to a lease and even if not so, no document being tendered for signature of defendant and defendant not having undertaken to get it registered, defendant was not liable for damages. 9 Bom. 63, Foll.

Further inasmuch as the plaintiff himself was entitled and in a position to obtain registration of the lease contained in the two documents, any damage which plaintiff suffered by reason of the non-registration of the said documents would appear to be the result of his own negligence. Where a decree-holder points out to the bailiff the goods of a wrong person as the goods of the judgment-debtor and the bailiff seizes the goods, the decree-holder is liable to that person for damages even though he may have acted honestly or mistakenly: 17 Cal. 436 (P.C.), Rel. on. (Raza, J.). ———Attachment before Judgment—Malicious because no reasonable cause for taking it—Sec. 95, C. P. C.—Termination of suit in plaintiff's favour is essential where such termination is possible—Compensation awarded though attachment not completed.

The plaintiff may be entitled to compensation, even though the attachment was not completed, if, notwithstanding that, he sustained injury by what was actually done.

The absence of reasonable and probable cause for taking legal action in execution or otherwise is, some evidence, from which malice may be inferred.

The termination of the proceedings in the plaintiff's favour, is essential, but this is applicable only to cases in which a distinct termination in favour of one party or other is possible, and not to a case in which the proceedings cannot end by their nature in any judicial disposal. ———Teacher just like parent can inflict corporal punishment—Punishment to be moderate and reasonable and without malice, etc.—No damages could then be awarded.

The master as the delegate of the parent may for the purpose of correction inflict moderate and reasonable corporal punishment. Care may no doubt be necessary in this application of this general principle in this country in which this delegated authority may be exercised by persons so dissimilar in status as a schoolmaster and the defendant; and Courts will no doubt not fail to insist on a close scrutiny of the severity of the chastisement inflicted and its justification.

Where the punishment, plaintiff complains of, was such as a parent might expect his child to receive, the conclusion must be that defendant was entitled to inflict it and is not liable because he did so.

If it be administered for the gratification of passion or of rage, or if it be immoderate, and excessive in its nature or degree or if it be protracted beyond the child's powers of endurance or with an instrument unfitted for the purpose and calculated to produce danger to life or limb, in all such cases the punishment is excessive and the violence is unlawful.

The schoolmaster cannot escape liability merely on the ground that chastisement administered to the pupil has not left on the pupil's body any marks of violence or injury. Cases are not uncommon in this country of punishments of extremely grotesque character being indicted involving danger to life or limb of the pupil or resulting in a state of prostration on the part of the pupil and Courts will certainly discountenance resort by the schoolmaster to such barbarous and inhuman forms of correction. stipulation that all the terms of the contract between R and P should be embodied as part of the contract, between D and P and he was bound under the contract to pay any loss or damages which P could have sustained by reason of D's breach of the contract so far as R was concerned.

Held: that the damages payable by D were only in law what P would be compelled to pay R. If he chose to pay a claim which R could not enforce he cannot claim as against D. If there was a long delay in the sale by R which delay was at P's instance he could get a right of action against D only if it was shown that D by his conduct or by request wanted the time of the contract to be extended. ———Tort-feasor aware even constructively of damages is liable for it—Existing circumstances at date of tort and not subsequent events determine damage.

In the case of tort as in contract if at the time when it is committed the tort-feasor knows, or as a reasonable person in the circumstances ought to have known that the commission of the tort may reasonably cause damage which would not usually result from the commission of the wrongful act, these damages become and are deemed to be the reasonable and natural consequences of the tort which has been committed. In cases where the damage is fixed and definite, and due to conditions determined at a particular date, the amount of damages is assessed by reference to the then existing circumstances and subsequent changes would not affect the result. In ordinary circumstances Court is to ascertain the value of the goods at the time of the conversion and in case the plaintiff could by going into the market have purchased other goods of the like quality and description, the price at which that would have been done, would be the particular measure of damages. Where plaintiff claimed Rs. 3,000 damages in respect of his having been forcibly dispossessed of certain sir fields on the ground that this would have been the net profit he might have obtained from the fields by self-cultivation

DAMAGES—Measure of.

Held: this amounted to a suit for prospective damages and the plaintiff was not entitled to claim in the circumstances of the case, where the cause of action was not over and done with and it was still continuing from day to day even after the suit was filed. When the cause of action is complete it would be most mischievous to say you shall not have all you are entitled to in your first action, but you shall be driven to bring a second, a third or a fourth action for the recovery of your damages. In such a case obviously, prospective damages can be allowed.

A cause of action in respect of which a plaintiff is entitled to have the prospective damages assessed must be distinguished from a continuing cause of action, that is to say, a cause of action which arises from the repetition or continuance of acts or omissions of the same kind as that for which the action has been brought. Similarly, where the damage consequent on an act or omission rather than the act or omission itself is actionable, then, as the action is not maintainable until the damage is sustained, an action will lie every time damage accrues from the act. Prospective damages are not recoverable where the cause of action is not the act, but the damage arising therefrom. (Findlay, O. J. C.). A money-decree was passed against the estate of a deceased person in hands of his heirs. On an application made to execute the decree the Court directed execution to issue against defendant No. 1 (present plaintiff, one of the heirs). In execution the plaintiff (defendant No. 1) was arrested under order obtained from the Deputy Registrar and brought before the Registrar of the Court who made the following order: 'Decree against the estate of the deceased. No execution by arrest should have been issued against the first defendant's person. Warrant of arrest was bad and illegal and not justified by the tenor of the decree'. Accordingly the defendant was released. In an action for damages for wrongful arrest:

When a wilful trespasser uses land of another without the permission of the owner, the damages to be awarded to the latter ought in no case to be less than the amount which, taking all circumstances into consideration, a careful and reasonable landlord would have consented to let the land for, or less than the amount which the trespasser would have had to pay as the result of reasonable negotiations for such use or occupation of the land. In addition to this minimum, the owner of the land has a right to an additional amount to be determined by the animus with which the wrong was committed by the trespasser; but the Court in determining this additional amount would consider whether the owner by his conduct did his best to prevent the wrong or he merely looked on and encouraged the wrong hoping to recover damages. Williams v. Corrie I. An intervening marriage could not do away with the cansonical bar of affinity which existed by both the Statute Law of England and that of the English Church in 1920 between a lady and her deceased husband's brother; the Act of 1921 read with the Act of 1907, is retrospective in effect so far as it declares that, in English law, the marriage between a man and his deceased brother's widow, whenever and wherever they took place, should not be regarded as illegal simply on the ground of that peculiar affinity. The true test as to whether a particular marriage ought to be regarded as a valid marriage (where a question of affinity arises) is to apply to the case the personal law of the community (i.e., the religious community) to which the parties concerned belong, after the passage in England of the Act of 1907. DECENNIAL SETTLEMENT REGULATION (Ben. Reg. 8 of 1793).

—Enhancement of Rent.

———Landlord and Tenant—Rent fixed in perpetuity cannot be enhanced.

No doubt a suit to enhance rent proceeds on the presumption that a zemindar holding under the Permanent Settlement has the right from time to time to raise the rents of all the rent-paying lands within his zemindari according to the paraganah or current rates unless either he is precluded from the exercise of that right by a contract binding on him or the lands in question can be brought within one of the exemptions recognised by Reg. VIII of 1793. Consequently in each case the nature of the tenure and the conditions under which it is held is the primary question to be determined. Where the grants show that the rate of rent was fixed in perpetuity, it is unnecessary to rely upon the doctrine that fixity of rent may be presumed from uniformity of rent for a long series of years. ———Proprietors of land—Settlement does not decide question of title.

The words "proprietor of land" as used both in the Bengal Code of 1793, and in the Madras Code of 1802, have a technical signification. They refer to zemindars, independent talookdars and others who pay the revenue assessed upon their estates immediately to Government. It would not be correct to say that any question of title was decided as the result of permanent settlement. A settlement with a person under the Bengal system does not establish in the person settled with a right to the land if he did not already possess it; but a settlement is an arrangement made by that person with the Government with respect to the revenue only. Consequently the fact of settlement with a person under the regulations does not conclude the question of proprietorship as between that person and the true proprietor. Thus, both as regards the rights of the ryots, and as regards the claims of other persons to be settled with, the rights of the actual possessor are subject to question, and are not concluded or rendered absolute by the fact of settlement.

The Pitiz Chiefs were held "actual proprietors of the lands" within the meaning of S. 5 of Regn. 8 of 1793 and that although they had lost the right to claim separation from Ramgarh and for that reason must be considered as dependent talukdars, they are still the actual proprietors of the lands and cannot be considered as leaseholders: 21 W. ———Contract Act, S. 73—Compromise decree providing for injunction preventing sellers-defendants from selling goods to third parties and providing for damages in case of breach—Defendants making breach and paying damages as per compromise— Decree cannot be said as satisfied—Decree—Construction.

On the 1st March, 1916 the respondents contracted with the appellants for the purchase of 38,000 tons of their manganese ore by instalments over an extended period. The contract contained provisions to secure to the buyers the exclusive supply of the seller's ore till the contract quantity had been worked out. In 1921 the buyers commenced a suit alleging deliveries of ore by the defendants to third parties in breach of the contract. During pendency of the suit the parties arrived at an agreement of compromise, and the terms were embodied in a compromise decree dated 28th February, 1922. Cl. 2 of the decree restrained the defendants from selling the ore from mines mentioned in the agreement of the 1st March, 1916 or alienating the mines themselves till they have delivered the whole remaining balance. Cl. 10 provided "that in the event of the defendants failing to deliver the full quantity of 4,000 tons of ore of the stipulated grade in any particular year or violating any of the conditions of this compromise, the defendants shall pay to plaintiffs damages at the rate of Re. 1 (rupee one) per ton on the whole of the quantity which may then have remained undelivered out of the total quantity of 31,234 tons and the same shall be recovered by execution of this decree." A breach occurred and the defendants presented an application for leave to deposit Rs. 28,649-2-9 to be paid over to the decree-holders, and for an order declaring the decree to have been thus fully satisfied. The decree-holders applied for execution of their decree by seizure and delivery to them of certain manganese ore, alleged to be lying at several mines and railway sidings, and by the appointment of a receiver and other relief. The trial Court granted application of defendants judgment-debtors and held that the decree-holders were not entitled to the relief prayed but must take in satisfaction the amount deposited by the judgment-debtors. This decision was affirmed in appeal. On appeal to Privy Council, Held: that Cl. 10 did not enable the judgment-debtors to render nugatory all their obligations under the prior part of the contract, whenever it suited their pockets to do so. It provided that they shall pay at the specified rate, if they fail to perform the contract in any respect, but it did not say that such payment was to be a full and exclusive satisfaction of all obligations under the contract. The payment into Court did not make the decree a satisfied decree. It provided a mode of enforcing such payment but it did not say that the other terms would not be enforced by execution of the decree, namely, by applying to the Court to enforce the injunction. ———Trust created with properties belonging to the persons absolutely—Surviving trustee cannot appoint successor in absence of express power.

There is no authority for the proposition that in cases where two or more persons create a trust with properties belonging to each absolutely, the surviving trustee has the right to appoint trustee in the absence of any express power conferred on him. The general rule is that the heirs of the founder or founders have such a right.

U and R were brothers and succeeded to certain properties as reversioners. R filed a suit against U for partition and a compromise decree was passed. By the compromise decree certain properties were set apart for the performance of religious trusts. U was constituted, by the rajinama decree, the trustee, but as he was old and blind, his son was allowed to be in actual management of the trust properties and to perform the trust. The rajinama decree provided that if there was default in performing the duties, then R would have the right to get possession of all the immovable and moveable properties in execution. He was given the right also to collect the produce thereof, pay the tirva of the same and perpetually get performed all the viniyogas without obstruction and any omission whatever.

———Defendants to get a certain sum and rest of estate to be divided equally between the parties—No indication that expenses incurred by defendants were included in the sum specially allowed to them—Defendants are entitled to half share of legitimate expenses.

A person applied for Letters of Administration in virtue of the will left by a Hindu widow. He was opposed by some people but ultimately Probate was granted to him. Then the defeated party filed a suit against him for declaration regarding a portion of the property. This suit was compromised and the compromise decree concluded as follows:—Defendants are entitled to Rs. 500 out of the estate and that the rest of the estate be divided equally (i. e., the plaintiffs get half and the defendants get half). Parties to bear their own costs."

Held: That in spite of this the words of the decree could only be read as meaning the net estate after legitimate deductions had been made. There was nothing in the wording of the compromise to show that any expenses incurred by the defendants were taken into account in calculating the sum of Rs. 500 and in a case of this sort the estate meant the amount which paid estate duty and which came into the hands of the administrators or its executors. Hence the defendants were entitled in addition to the sum of Rs. 500 specially allowed to them by the decree, to a half share of the expenses incurred by them in connection with the testatrix's funeral and in connection with obtaining the Probate and realising the assets. At the hearing of the appeal a petition was put in on behalf of both parties to the effect that it had been agreed between the parties that the plaintiffs would get a decree for Rs. 70,000 inclusive of all costs and interest up to the said date, and that the said amount would be paid by the defendant within two years therefrom with interest at the rate of Rs. 4-8-0 per cent. per annum till realisation, and that in default of payment within the said period of two years, the said amount of Rs. 70,000 with interest at the said rate till realization would be realized by the sale of the properties mentioned in the plaint. Thereupon it was ordered that the said petition should be filed as record and that the defendant and the plaintiffs should give effect to and be bound by the terms thereof.

Held, that the intention of the parties, as far as the same can be gathered from the compromise decree, was that immediately on the expiration of two years from the date of the decree, the plaintiffs would be competent to realise the moneys due to them by the sale of the properties mentioned in the plaint, that under the provisions of O. 22, R. 12, C. ———Precedents cannot be applied—Decree, in a suit on mortgage by widow of mortgagor, declaring plaintiff's right to recover possession and further declaring devolution of right on her death—No period for paymens of mortgage money fixed—Decree is purely declaratory—Subsequent suit for redemption is not barred either by Civil P. C., S. 11 or S. 47.

On a question of interpretation of a document precedents can hardly arise. Each document must be construed on its own language and in the light of surrounding circumstances if relevant; it is not right for the Court in interpreting a decree to allow to be controlled by decisions in which other documents have been interpreted.

In a suit by widow of the mortgagor in respect of the mortgage, a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff, declaring the right to redeem and the right to recover possession on payment of a certain amount and further declaring devolution of the right on the death of the plaintiff, but no period for the payment of the mortgage money was fixed.

Held: that the decree was to be interpreted as purely declaratory in the nature of the plaintiff's right to redeem the mortgaged property leaving it open to the plaintiff to claim actual possession whenever she found it convenient to do so on payment of the mortgage money.

Held: further, that a subsequent suit for redemption was neither barred by the rule of res judicata nor by the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C. (Wazir Hasan and Gokar Nath Misra, JJ.). SURAJ BAKHSH v. GANGA BAKHSH. 105 I. C. 93= 4 O. W. N. 882=A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 457 (a).

On the plaintiff's application for recovery of the money by execution, defendant objected that the plaintiff had taken certain cattle which had been assigned to the defendant and that the value of those cattle should be set off against the amount claimed by the plaintiff.

Held: that inasmuch as the decree had only declared the right of the defendant to the cattle his remedy was to sue the plaintiff for the value of the cattle taken by the latter and that he could not claim a set-off in execution proceeding. He, however, did not withdraw the tender till 17th September on which date he deposited the money in the Treasury.

Held: that the deposit was made beyond time and though the money was tendered on the 14th the judgment-debtor delayed to take the tender from the Court: A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 263; A.I.R. 1926 All. 602, Dist. (Pullan, J.). SHEO NATH v. MT. GANESHA. 105 I.C. 734= A.I.R.1928 Oudh 209 (1).

———Failure to pay—Default clause—Court has wide powers to relieve party from consequences of default—Equity.

The amount due under a decree was to be paid in instalments. On failure to pay two instalments, the whole amount then due could be recovered by sale of certain property over which a charge was created. The first instalment was paid when the second became due. The judgment-debtor applied to the Court for extension of time for the payment of second instalment and on the dismissal of the application, the amount of the second instalment was paid into the Court. In the meantime, the third instalment became due. The decree-holder did not accept the payment of the second instalment and applied to the Court to recover the balance due by sale of the property:

Held: As a Court of equity the High Court had wide powers to do what seemed to it just. There is no injustice in putting the decree-holder exactly in the same position as if no default has been committed because the decree-holder has the security of the property for the balance of the decretal amount and interest was running on that amount. A decree was passed in terms of this award.

The plaintiff is not entitled to take possession of the lands in dispute in any other month except Chaitra.' The plaintiff was now seeking to execute the decree and was met by contention that execution was barred.

DECREE—Construction—Personal Liability.

———Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 5—Question as to personal liability for costs is one of construction of decree.

The question whether in a mortgage-suit, the costs are to be paid by judgment-debtor personally must always be regarded as one of construction of the decree and of the intention of the Court to be gathered from the terms of the decree. If a decree on a proper construction should be held to have made the costs payable personally by the defendants, apart altogether from the securities or the sale of them, there is not and could not be any rule or principle of law saying that such a decree could not be executed according to its tenor.

Where a Court after being informed of satisfaction having been entered up of the original decree, deliberately amended the decree and made an order against a party for the payment of costs without there being any reference whatever to the mortgage securities:

Held: that the obvious intention of the Court was that the amount must be paid personally and a construction which would have the effect of importing into the decree a reference which was not there, to the mortgage security or the sale of it, would be unreasonable. ———*T.P.Act, S.*68—Mortgage-decree—Construction.

One of the reliefs in a mortgage suit was to make the amount under the mortgage bond a charge upon the surplus of the sale proceeds of one of the mortgaged properties sold. At the end of the relief claimed, it was asked that the balance of the decretal amount should be realised from the property and the person of the defendant or defendants. The Court passed a decree under Section 68 as under: "The suit for Rs. 5,877-10-0 with proportionate costs to be decreed in terms of relief five of the claim. He is further declared to have a charge on the surplus sale proceeds which is in deposit in the Collectorate" and refused a mortgage-decree.

Held: that the decree did not include a direction that the balance of the decretal amount could be recovered from the defendants personally and from their personal property by implication, as they were purchasers of the mortgaged property and under the decree were not expressly made liable. The decree granted only that portion of relief No. 5 which related to the creation of the charge on the surplus sale proceeds regarding the amount due under the mortgage-deed. A Mahomedan widow, after her husband's death, sued to enforce her dower claim. She claimed by her plaint that alienations made by her husband were invalid and that she was entitled to recover her dower debt from the properties so alienated. Held: what was contemplated was that in case the plaintiff was compelled to vacate against her wish she should be given Rs. 500 in lieu of maintenance and the defendants could not sell the said property whenever they liked, free of the plaintiff's right to reside therein and ask the plaintiff to go out of the property. A zamindar died leaving a widow, a daughter, daughter's son, an undivided co-parcener, a concubine and an illegitimate son by her. The widow entered into possession of zamindari. The co-parcener brought a suit to recover the zamindari but under a compromise decree the widow was allowed to enjoy the estate during her lifetime. In 1902 the illegitimate son filed a suit against the widow wherein the Court decreed that he was entitled to half a share in the separate estate and partition of the same, and also awarded half the amount of the outstandings due to zamindar. During the pendency of appeal the widow died and the daughter's son was brought on record as the legal representative. In execution proceedings the illegitimate son claimed, as part of separate estate, property consisting of jewels belonging personally to zamindar and to proceed against the other half for the outstandings.

Held: that the final decree of the High Court certainly gave to the illegitimate son a half share of such jewels as formed the separate property of the zamindar.

Held also: that as the decree-holder sought to execute his decree against items of jewels which the widow never asserted to be hers as streedhanam but which he claimed to be hers, there was certainly some burden of proof on the decree-holder but at the same time the reversioner also should show that they formed part of the zamindar's estate.

Held further: that the decree-holder was entitled to proceed in execution of his decree against all the items found to belong to zamindar and only a half share in the items belonging to zamindar as separate property but not against the other half which belonged to the reversioner. Under a compromise terminating a suit for partnership accounts, a person, S, was held to be entitled to a three annas share in the partnership and it was further agreed that another sharer should transact all the business of the firm, balance the accounts and render them when asked. In the decree that followed it was ordered and declared in terms of compromise that S was entitled to three-annas share in the property belonging to the firm. S sought to execute the decree praying that he should be put in joint possession of his share and if the decree were considered as not embodying terms of contract it should be amended under S. 152. No appeal against the decree was filed, nor any application for review made within time:

Held: that the decree was only declaratory and was also in accordance with the terms of the compromise. It could not, therefore, be executed as sought for.

Held further: that even supposing that the decree was faulty as not being according to terms of the compromise, it could not now be amended, as time for such amendment as to make it capable of execution had passed by: 21 C. In a suit on a promissory note a decree was passed that "the first defendant do pay the decree amount from the estate of the deceased." Subsequent to the decree, the defendant 3 thereon originally impleaded as one of the heirs of the legal estate of the deceased but subsequently exonerated from the suit which was dismissed as against him, sued for recovery of possession of the estate of the deceased and on 1st December, 1923, obtained a decree for delivery of the estate. Two days prior to the delivery an assignee of the promissory note decree attached part of the estate in execution and the objection to attachment was overruled by both the Courts below.

Held: that the promissory note decree was not a decree against the estate but against the defendant 1 therein, limited in liability to meet the decree amount out of the estate and not executable against the petitioner who had obtained a decree for its delivery or against the property which was declared not to be the property of defendant 1 but the property of the petitioner: 33 Mad. 75, Foll.; 33 Mad. 6; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 487 and 26 Mad. 230, Dist. (Wallace, J.). The entire suit which was one for contribution was based upon an ekrarnama or certain dealings which the plaintiffs alleged were binding upon three sets of defendants as members of a joint Mitakshara family. The foundation of the liability of the defendants was common, though the extent of their liability might have been different, and in the appeal by one set of defendants from the decree by the trial Court the foundation of the plaintiff's claim was involved. The appellate Court (High Court) dismissed the suit relying upon O. 41, R. 33. Where there was appearance by the plaintiff in the former suit, but in which the plaintiff nevertheless contended that the decree in the former suit was obtained by fraud:

Held, that clearly if summons was served on the plaintiff in the former suit it could not be urged by him that there was initially an attempt to prevent him from making his defence. Consequently the endeavour to induce the Court to examine the propriety of the previous judgment must fail unless the Court is satisfied that there was some fraud in relation to the proceedings of the suit. This principle has no bearing on the case in which there was an attempt to prevent the plaintiff from making his defence. The failure to serve summons on a defendant may be accidental or deliberate; and where the Court finds as a fact, that there was no foundation for the suit itself, it is open to the Court to hold that the suppression of summons was deliberate with the object of snatching a decree from the Court in the absence of the defendant. It is clear and settled law that money recovered under a decree or judgment cannot be recovered back in a fresh suit or action whilst the decree or action under which it was recovered remains in force, but this rule of law rests upon this ground, that the original decree or judgment must be taken to be subsisting and valid until it has been reversed or superseded by same ulterior proceeding. If it has been reversed or superseded, the money recovered under it ought certainly to be refunded, and is recoverable either by summary process or by a new suit or action. Nanhe and Teja were brothers who together formed a joint family. They owned an ancestral house. On the 4th February, 1908, Nanhe mortgaged the whole house to Tika Ram. Tika Ram sued on his mortgage and got a preliminary decree for sale in 1912. Before Tika Ram could get an order for sale under O. 34, R. 5, Teja the other brother brought a suit to avoid the mortgage on the ground that Nanhe as a member of an undivided joint Hindu family could not make a valid mortgage of the ancestral house without his consent and in the absence of legal necessity and for a declaration that the house could not be sold under the mortgage decree. The suit was decreed on January 4th, 1913. Thereupon Tika Ram abandoned his rights under the mortgage and asked the Court then seized of the execution proceedings to pass a decree under O. 34, R. 6 and that was done. The effect of that was to give Tika Ram a simple money-decree against Nanhe. Nanhe was a party to these proceedings, but he did not contest the application nor did he appeal from the order passed. In execution of that decree the right, title and interest of Nanhe in the house in suit was put up for sale and was purchased by Tika Ram who then brought a suit for partition for half the house on the allegation that Nanhe's right, title and interest in the whole house amounted to half. Teja having failed to set aside the sale in the execution department filed a counter-suit for declaration that the execution sale in favour of Tika was invalid and that he (Tika Ram) was not entitled to partition the house.

Held: that the Court passed an order which it should not have passed having regard to the provisions of the Code. But it was seized of the execution of the case and it did pass that decree. Whether right or wrong that decree not having been challenged by Nanhe, the party concerned and any one who stands in his shoes as Tika Ram does in this case, cannot go behind it. Tika Ram although in the inception his title was impeachable, has now acquired an absolute title which is good against all the world and therefore good against Teja. DECREE—Form of.

In a suit, in which no relief for possession has ever been asked, a formal decree directing the plaintiffs to be restored to possession whether conditional or otherwise, cannot and ought not to be passed.

Per Walsh, J. :—There is no reason when an appellate Court is seized of the whole matter why it should hold itself prevented from making such orders as are necessary to terminate the controversy and to do justice between the parties, and why it is not competent to High Court in appeal to decree that possession to the sons which they have wrongfully been deprived of subject to their doing equity by discharging the antecedent debt which alone could support the transaction. DECREE—Setting aside—Fraud—Nature of Proof.

Any and every act of the defendant which misleads the Court does not afford a cause of action to the plaintiff to found a separate suit for having a decree declared void. Thus if in the previous case the Court was misled into holding that the service of the summons by registered post was good service it would not by itself be sufficient to found a separate action on the ground of fraud. —Setting aside—Fraud—Non-service.

———Non-service to be fraudulent must be in pursuance of fraudulent intent—Claim unfounded in law is fraudulent if made for a fraudulent purpose.

The mere fact that notice was not served is not necessarily a fraud. If, on the other hand, it is shown that there was any deliberate suppression of notice particularly in order to give effect to any fraudulent scheme then such suppression of notice would be clearly fraud. Further it is not necessarily fraud on the part of any person to put forward a claim which is in fact unfounded in law. A person may make a claim to which he is not entitled and his conduct is not fraudulent merely on that ground. It must be found that there were circumstances which establish that the claim if there be one, was made with knowledge and for a fraudulent purpose. (Woodroffe and Suhrawardy, JJ.). ———Absence of service by itself does not indicate fraud but absence of foundation for suit or presence of fair defence indicate fraud.

Although the Court will not regard an allegation that there was a failure on the part of the plaintiff to serve processes on the defendant as an allegation of fraud, the case will assume a different aspect if there are allegations in the plaint which suggest that there was no foundation at all for the suit or that there was a fair defence to the suit. Such allegations, if established will instantly raise the presumption that the failure on the part of the plaintiff to serve processes on the defendant or to take steps to have a guardian appointed for the minor, was deliberate and was part of a carefully planned campaign to snatch a decree in the absence of the defendants. 5 A. —Setting aside—Fraud—Powers of Court.

———Ex parte decree—Suppression of service of summons proved—Court can enquire whether the claim in the original suit was true or false.

In a suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud, it is open to the Court to consider the question as to whether the claim of the plaintiff in the previous suit was a true or a false claim. The plaintiffs in the latter suit have in the first place to show that there was no service of summons, then to show that the non-service of the summons was due to a fraud practised by the plaintiff in the previous suit with the object of keeping the defendant in that suit in ignorance of the suit and of preventing him from placing his case before the Court.

After non-service of the summons is proved it is open to the Court to go into the question as regards the merits of the previous suit with the object of finding as to whether, fraud was actually perpetrated, and as to whether, if opportunity had been given to the defendant he could have produced evidence which might have led the Court to come to a different decision: 18 C.W.N. 447, Rel. on; 16 C.W.N. 1002, Expl.; A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 327 and A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 241, Ref. (Kulwant Sahay and Allanson JJ.). The decree of the High Court ran thus: "It is ordered and decreed that the plaintiff do get khas possession against the tenant defendants, and it is further ordered and decreed that the plaintiff do realize mesne profits for three years prior to the institution of the suit, the amount to be determined in execution proceedings." The Judge upon other materials placed before him in execution proceedings found that the plaintiff had entered into a compromise with certain persons regarding certain lands and he came to the conclusion that as the compromise was not brought to the notice of the High Court, the High Court had made the decree as stated above.

Held: that no doubt, if the compromise had been brought to the notice of the High Court, the decree might have been made otherwise. But the Subordinate Judge had acted absolutely without jurisdiction in modifying the decree of the High Court in the way he thought that the High Court should have made its decree. If the defendant judgment-debtors had suffered in any way by reason of anything which the plaintiff had done and which was not brought to the notice of the High Court when the case was heard, the proper way was to have the decree amended either by way of review or by some other legal proceeding. The defendants not having done that, could not ask the Subordinate Judge to amend the decree of the High Court in the manner which the Subordinate Judge thought just and to execute the decree in that way. There was not ambiguity in the decree and the clear duty of the executing Court was to execute the decree as it stood. (B.B. Ghose and Bose, JJ.). DECREE—Setting aside—Right to sue.

———Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 1—Decree passed against A in a suit by R on the admission of claim made by A's general agent—Mukhtyarnama conferring no such power on agent—Remedy open to A is by separate suit and not review of judgment.

In a suit by R against A a decree was passed against A on the basis of an admission of the claim made by A's general agent. Thereupon A brought a suit to get the decree set aside alleging that Mukhtyarnama executed by A did not confer any power on his agent to admit any claim or make any compromise.

Held: that A could not seek the remedy by way of review of judgment and the proper remedy for him was by instituting a regular suit for the purpose inasmuch as the decree did not contain merely a mistake or an error apparent on the face of the record but one involving a delicate question whether the general agent of A had authority under the mukhtyarnama executed in his favour to admit the claim: Huddersfield Banking Co., Ltd. v. Henry Lister & Son, Ltd., (1895) 2 Ch. 273; 10 C.W.N. 529; 13 C.W.N. 1197; 14 C.W.N. 451 and 34 All. 143, Discussed and Rel. on; 38 All. 7; 41 Mad. 743 and 23 O.C. 342; Dist. (Gokaran Nath Misra and Nanavutty, JJ.). ———Evidence Act, S. 44—Collusive decree binds parties thereto and their representatives—It is not nullity.

A collusive decree binds the parties thereto and is not a nullity. It is also binding on the representatives of the parties.

No doubt a decree can be avoided on the ground of fraud or collusion under S. 44 of the Evidence Act, but there is a great difference between fraud and collusion. A party who has been made the victim of a fraud can obviously avoid a decree on the ground that he has discovered the fraud subsequent to the decree which could not have been made a point of defence in the former litigation. On the other hand, the fact of collusion is a matter which must have been well-known to both the parties and is a point which could and might have been raised before the decree was passed on the last occasion. A third party can undoubtedly avoid a decree on the ground that it has been obtained collusively, but a party to a collusive decree cannot avoid it on that ground: 11 Bom. 708; 20 Mad. 333; 31 Mad. 485 and 18 Mad. 378, Rel. on. (Sulaiman, J.). A sale purported to be for a sum of Rs. 1,200. It was recited in the sale-deed that a sum of Rs. 550 was being left with the purchaser to redeem a prior mortgage and the balance of Rs. 650 was to be paid before the registering officer. It was found that the money was handed over to the vendor before the registering officer but that after it had been so made over it was returned again to the purchaser. It was argued that there was no sale at all inasmuch as the vendor got nothing. It was however found that the market value of the property sold was not more than Rs. 500:

Held: that these unmistakably point to the grant of an absolute estate in favour of M.

Held, further, that a provision about enjoyment along with male issue in the deed of gift may be rejected at most as an idle attempt to derogate from the grant and does not affect the absolute estate created by the deed. (Madhavan Nair, J.). NAGARAJA AYYAR v. NATESA AIYAR.

After them their descendants shall enjoy the same with the right of alienations as they pleased."

of a deed of gift, in default of definite evidence to the effect, that at the time of the deed of gift the donor had departed from his previous intention and decided not only to make an immediate gift of property considerably larger than that bequeathed under the will, but at the same time to confer an absolute title in place of a life-interest, grant will not per se create heritable estate: 23 All. 194 (P.C.), Rel. on; 3 O. A person executed a patni talukdari patta of his taluk in favour of his daughter. She and her sons born of her womb and sons born of their loins in succession and the daughters of her womb were to continue to possess the same and were to be malik in possession by right of miras talukdari. But except for these her other heirs such as her daughters' descendants or her husband were to have no right to it.

Held: that the donor in this case desired to grant an estate of inheritance but directed that the succession should take place in a specified manner. It was not limited to what should happen at her death but gave directions for an indefinite period of time or, in other words, he intended to alter the rule of succession. When, on a deed of gift, the husband transfers the property to his wife as a special gift describing it as the property in his exclusive proprietary right, and says that he transfers all the rights held by him to her, that she is to hold it generation after generation, that neither himself nor his own heir is ever to make a claim against her, and that no one except her is to have any connexion with the property, the only construction to be placed upon the deed is that it transferred full proprietary rights. ———A Hindu's will devising his entire property to his wife with powers of alienation in case of necessity was held not to curtail her powers to legal necessity, the reference to necessity being held as only the ordinary aversion of an owner to alienate save when necessary.

Where the will devising the whole of the property to the testator's wife stated, "I fully empower B (wife) to deal with my property if it becomes necessary to do so in any manner she may deem proper, by way of effecting a mortgage, sale, charity, etc."

Held: (Per Fawcett, J.):—The words "if it becomes necessary to do so" cannot properly be read as restricting the widow's power of alienation to legal necessity under Hindu Law. They are intended to bar alienations for which there are no reasonable grounds and are based on the ordinary aversion of an owner to alienate unless it is necessary to do so. ———An estate equivalent to one in fee simple, approaches absolute ownership.

Strict proof is necessary of any right in derogation of Sovereign's right to assess land at discretion.

An estate equivalent to an estate in fee simple is one approaching as near as possible to an estate of absolute ownership.

To describe an estate as "nearly equal to a freehold" when it is really a leasehold amounts to mere puffing. But one equivalent to that estate is on a different footing. (4 Bom. H.C.R. 1, Foll.).

Strict proof must be given of any right set up in derogation of the inherent right of the Sovereign to assess the land at his discretion; and the fact that a very small rent has been paid for many years, does not show that the Government has forfeited its right to enhance the assessment in respect of such land. "Malik" and "Malkiyat" in a formal document imply an absolute estate unless there is something in the context to qualify it. Where the husband in a deed purporting to be a sale-deed in favour of his wife in consideration of her dower clearly stated that he had given proprietary possession to her and also that she had the full power of a proprietor to alienate the house sold:

———Total relinquishment of rights was inferred from the use of words like 'for ever'—Grant held as heritable though no express words used.

A service grant to one B, by proprietor of Bettiah Raj contained the following passage:—"Hence because of that good work it is ordered that whatever trees have been planted by his ancestor and also if he plants any; the share of the Raj in them is given up. Hence this parwana is written to all forbidding you in any way to interfere with the trees standing on the nakdi holdings of the said B for ever."

Held: that, considering the context and the other provisions in the document and the evidence relating to subsequent conduct of the parties, the intention was that the landlord should relinquish his right to the trees both present and future. Even if a document should contain word such as "always," or "for ever" or similar words, if the grant is clearly the grant of a life-interest only the mere use of such words will not have the effect of extending the grant beyond the lifetime of the grantee. But it is equally true if there are no words of limitation in a grant then, even if there are no specific words of inheritance, it may still be a grant in perpetuity. 23 A. 324; (P.C.); 23 C. 838 (P.C.); 14 M.I.A. 247, Ref. (Dawson-Miller C.J. and Mullick, J.). ———"To X and his male heirs"—X gets an absolute estate.

Where a deed of settlement executed by a Parsee Lady gave certain properties to "X and his male heirs absolutely in equal shares."

Held: Per Shah, Ag. C.J.—That the use of the words "absolutely in equal shares" negative the idea of any limitation upon the estate given and that the use of the words "male heirs" does not import any limitation either under the English or the Indian law.

Held: Per Marten, J.—The words "his heirs" or "his male heirs" are regarded in English law as words of limitation and not of purchase. They are not taken as conferring any estate on the heir but simply as showing or marking out the estate the ancestor takes. Further a gift to a man and his male heirs and not to the "male heirs of his body" is an attempt to create an estate unknown to the law and consequently the English law rejects the word 'male' and construes the gift as one to a man and his heirs simpliciter (i.e.) as a gift in fee simple. Even if the estate created is in tail or in tail male under the English law, such an estate is unknown to the Indian law and cannot be imported into India where the land settled is situate and which must therefore devolve according to the lex loci. ———Words and Phrases—You and your heirs—Absolute estate to grantee—His heirs hold it as ancestral property.

But the succeeding clause made specific reference to the income as that which the lady was to utilize and there was the further clause that if a child should be born the property should belong to that child.

Held: these two clauses seem inconsistent with the construction of the deed as conferring an absolute estate and to indicate what the real intention of the grantor was and construing the deed as a whole it conferred a life-interest only. ———Ambiguity in the operative part may be cleared up by reference to recitals.

Per Dawson-Miller, C. J.—Where there is ambiguity in the operative part of the deed, one should look back to the recitals and be guided by what is therein contained in interpreting the ambiguity. This canon of construction, however, cannot apply in all cases where there is a doubt or difficulty in the construction of the document. If one is satisfied upon the natural construction of the operative part of the deed that certain property passes, notwithstanding that the construction may be difficult, the recitals have no binding force.

Per Das, J.—The recitals in a conveyance are subordinate to the operative part and that consequently, where the operative part is clear, it is treated as expressing the intention of the parties, and it prevails over any suggestion of a contrary intention afforded by the recitals; but it is well established that where the operative part is doubtful and it is impossible to say, on a mere reading of it, to which properties it refers, then the recitals can and ought to be used to explain its meaning, and that while, for the purpose of construing the operative part the whole of the instrument may be referred to, yet the recitals leading up to it are more likely to furnish the key to its true construction than the subordinate clauses of the deed. For instance, parcels of a deed described with certainty are not cut down by recitals showing that something less was intended to pass; but the recitals assist the construction of the operative part where there is an ambiguity in the operative part as to the property, affected. (Walsh v. Trevanion, (1850) 15 Q.B. 733, Foll.). *(Dawson-Miller, C. Held: further that the proper interpretation of "good debts.....business" is that if there is a balance of good debts over bad debts, then it is to be divided; if there is no balance, there will be nothing to be divided. N was a trader by profession and carried on in conjunction with his wife, G a profitable business in rice. Some months after G's death, which occurred in December, 1904, N contemplated marrying again. Before the marriage was actually contracted, on the 11th May, 1905, he executed a document apparently a partnership deed which contained among other things :—

(i) All the house sites, buildings, rice, paddy, ponies, gharries, gold and money, which have been in existence up to this date, will belong to the partnership;

(ii) Either partner Ma E Yin or Ma Thaung, the daughters, will take charge of all the private properties belonging to partnership, such as jewellery, etc.

—Construction—Family arrangement or settlement.

A suit for partition between two brothers K and T was compromised under which the share of K in all the joint-properties was fixed at 6 annas, and that of his brother T at 10 annas, the properties being left joint as before. Later on a further dispute arose between the brothers which was settled by the execution of an annuity bond which proceeded on the narrative that the two brothers were desirous of getting their movable and immovable properties partitioned between them, but that instead of partitioning them out in accordance with the compromise previously effected, K gave his whole share to his brother T and his heirs on a series of conditions. The leading provision was that a sum of Rs. 40 per month should be paid by T to K and after his death to his widow, as representing the profits of his share of the movable and immovable properties. There were other conditions namely : "If T or after his death his heirs make default in payment of the said monthly sum of Rs. 40, then K or his wife would be competent to partition out the immovable properties of his share and to transfer the same by sale, gift, etc., at his or her pleasure. (He) was to receive from T or his heirs the sum of Rs. 2,000 (two thousand) on account of the price of the movable properties (and) T or his heirs would be bound to pay the same; if the same be not paid then K or his wife would be entitled to realize the same from the movable and immovable properties of T or his heirs."

Further so long as K or his wife received the said monthly sum of Rs. 40, he or she should not have any power to transfer by sale, gift, &c., or to encumber his share of the properties. As regards K's son and daughter the provision was "If a son be born to K then that son shall receive the sum of Rs. 2,000, the price of the movable properties and the immovable properties of his share. If no son be born, then after the death of K and his wife, his daughter or daughter's son or daughter should get from T or his heirs the sum of Rs. 2,000 (two thousand) only, and shall not be competent to claim any other property. If T or his heirs fail to pay the said sum of Rs. 2,000 (two thousand), then the aforesaid daughter or daughter's son or daughter shall get the immovable properties of K's share and to this neither T nor his heirs shall have any objection."

K was predeceased by his wife, and he himself died later on leaving a daughter who was his sole heir and thus entitled to succeed to any property that was vested in him at the date of his death. T did not keep up his terms even during K's lifetime and therefore K demanded partition of the joint properties and payment of the Rs. 2,000 in question. No legal proceedings were taken for the partition of the properties but T acknowledged the justness of his brother's claim. He, however, being unable to pay, later on sold his share in certain of the joint properties the consideration for which was certain debts due to K and the amount of Rs. 2,000. K let the properties so acquired from his brother and they passed to his daughter as her heir. A large number, however, of the other properties which belonged jointly to the brothers, had not been partitioned,and accordingly the daughter sued for partition of these properties and for the recovery of specific possession of a 6 annas share thereof.

Held: that her right to obtain partition was not excluded by provisions in the annuity bond. (Lord Salvesen). HEMLATA DEBI v. SALYA CHARAN BANERJI. 109 I.C. 642=5 O.W.N. 652=A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 248.

———Grant in lieu of maintenance—Whether estate conferred is absolute or limited depends on circumstances of each case—The words "proprietor" or "for ever" do not necessarily confer absolute estate—A claim divesting an absolute estate on happening of certain contingency is not invalid.

When the purport of the grant is the maintenance of the grantee, there is a prima facie indication that the grant was intended only to be for life. But it cannot be said that where the purport of the grant is maintenance, the estate conferred cannot be an absolute estate. This would depend on the construction of the particular deed taken as a whole. If the deed stated clearly that the grantee was to have an absolute interest, such interest cannot be controlled by the mere fact that the motive of the grant was maintenance, but where the terms of the grant are not clear and there are inconsistent conditions in the deed itself pointing to opposite conclusions, the safe rule is to construe the document as a whole and not to hold it to confer absolute title merely on the ground that the words used were "as proprietor" and "for ever" and "in perpetuity."

In the case of family settlements, conditions may be inserted therein which would not be valid in the case of ordinary deeds, under the ordinary law, but such conditions in the deed would be valid and enforceable, when forming a part of such family settlement: (Case-law cited).

A clause in a deed laying down that an absolute estate was to be divested on the happening of a particular contingency cannot be treated as invalid. It is neither the law in England nor in India. The correct rule of law appears to be that the first question which has to be decided on the interpretation of the deed is whether under the terms of that deed an absolute estate has been conferred or only a qualified estate. If it is clear that the estate is a qualified estate, no question as to the validity or otherwise of the gift ever can arise. It must be held to be good. If, however, the estate is found to be an absolute estate, Courts have to determine whether under the terms of the deed such estate is to be defeated on the happening of a particular contingency: 4 Cal. 23 (P.C.) and 16 Cal. 383 (P. C.), Rel. on.

Under a family settlement a talukdar granted some villages to his brothers in lieu of maintenance and in the deed of settlement it was stated that the villages given to each of the brothers were to be given to them in perpetuity for ever; generation after generation with proprietary powers, the words used in the vernacular being "waste dawam wa hamesha ka naslan bad naslan batanan wa batnan bad batnan ba akhtiar malikana." It was further laid down that if no male issue was born to a Guzaradar, then the female issue would be allowed maintenance, and the widow of Guzaradar was to remain in possession of the entire property, without power of alienation during her lifetime, and after her death the property was to be divided among the surviving brothers.

Held: that the words "naslan bad naslan" and "batnan bad batnan" indicated an idea not to make a guzara resumable after the death of the particular grantee but to make it heritable and heritable only by the lineal male descendants, and such male lineal descendants would be covered by the expressions "naslan" (progeny) and "batnan" (womb).

The estate conferred upon each of the brothers was an estate in its inception of an absolute character, but heritable only by the male lineal descendants of the grantee and by his widow for her lifetime in case there was no such descendant, and descendible to his surviving brothers after the death of the widow. ———Confiscation of Tanjore Raj—Re-grant to widows—After them, daughter, and failing her, next heirs of Raja to inherit—Daughter predeceasing last widow—Widows take life-estate—Raja's next heirs inherit after last widow's death—Rights of illegitimate sons and after adopted son are not excluded.

On the death of the Last Raja of Tanjore in 1855 leaving a number of widows, a daughter, a number of illegitimate children, a mother, etc., the Government confiscated in 1856 his Raj declaring the same to have lapsed to the British Government on the ground that "the Raja had died without leaving a son by birth or adoption." Subsequently in 1862, the Government decided to relinquish the private estate of the late Raja in favour of his heirs. The terms of the order declaring the manner in which this relinquishment was to be effected, contained the following :—

DEED—Construction—Grant.

"The Estate will therefore be made over to the senior widow who will have the management and control of the property, and it will be her duty to provide a suitable manner for the participative enjoyment of the Estate in question, by the other widows her co-heirs. On the death of the last surviving widow, the daughter of the late Raja, or failing her, the next heirs of the late Raja, if any, will inherit the property."

The senior widow subsequently adopted a son. The daughter predeceased the last surviving widow.

Held: (1) The title which the heirs got must depend entirely on the terms of the re-grant. (2) The grant did not create an ordinary Hindu widow's estate in favour of the widows of the Raja but a life-estate very much resembling the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow and with all the incidents of a widow's estate except the liability to be divested, by a subsequently adopted son rather than an estate of inheritance. (3) The daughter was given what may either be described as a vested interest defeasible in the event of her predeceasing the last widow or a contingent interest on her surviving all the widows. (4) "Failing her" did not mean "failing her and her heirs." (5) The right of the after-adopted son and his descendants to succeed after the death of the widows and daughter was not negatived by the grant. (6) The grant did not negative by its terms, the right of the Raja's illegitimate sons to succeed on the death of the last widow. (7) The heirship on the death of the last of the widows was to be determined according to who was the nearest heir to the Raja on such death and not according to who was the heir next after the daughter in order of succession according to Hindu Law.

Per Kumaraswamy Sastri, J.—The grant being a Crown grant, Act XXV of 1895 (Crown Grants Act) which is made retrospective applies and the grant must take effect according to its tenor irrespective of the Hindu Law. ———Maintenance grant is resumable on the death of grantee and not on the death of grantor—Such a grant may be heritable if intended.

A maintenance grant is resumable on the death of the grantee and not on the death of the grantor.

DEED—Construction—Grant.

A maintenance grant is not absolutely inconsistent with a grant to the donee and his heirs. Such a grant is prima facie resumable on the death of the grantee, but the context may show that it was intended to make provision not only for the donee but for the heirs of the donee. Where the grant is so expressed, the grantor has the right to resume the grant on the extinction of the line of the grantee. It is all a question of construction. The operative clauses in a maintenance grant were in these terms : "I have made a grant of the milkiat right in the Mouzas named below by way of maintenance with the detail as follows: If any of the said three persons or their heirs put forward hereafter any objection against the rais of the Raj as regards the difference in their maintenance grants which according to the custom obtaining in the family I am competent to assign more to one and less to another, such objection shall not be held legal or tenable in Courts."

Held: that the grantor by providing against the possibility of an objection on the part of the heirs of the grantees had clearly indicated that the grantees took a heritable but not an absolute interest under the grant. 27 Cal. 156; Foll. 22 W. ———Deed carrying out decision of Court—Should be construed ut res magis valent quam pereat—Maxim.

In construing an instrument of settlement carrying out a decision of the Court, Courts ought to take for their guidance the rule that, if possible, such a document should be construed ut res magis valent quam pereat.

A deed of settlement provided that on the death of the last three persons, i. e., H. R. and D. the mother of R. L. the second son of H. and his heirs and representatives, shall succeed to the entire Rampur Kaithala estate, as provided by S. 22 of Act I of 1869. But the said L. shall not interfere in any way with the said ilaqa, besides the six villages which he has received under S. 8, during the lifetime of R. and his mother, D.

Held: in the first place the words "heirs and representatives" are to be treated as words of limitation and not of purchase, that is, they are merely intended to express the absolute estate which it was proposed to give to Lachman as distinguished from the life estates which had preceded it. This being so, the later words in the sentence may be regarded either as an idle attempt to derogate from the grant previously made and therefore to be rejected, or as words of description only, stating the legal incidents which the grantor conceived to belong to the estate which he had granted. In this case his mistake as to the legal consequence does not affect the grant which he has made and that it was his self-acquired property and therefore received an absolute estate in reversion. (Lord Phillimore). LAL RAM v. Dy. ———British North America Act (1867), Ss. 90-E, 56 —Provincial Legislation, disallowance of Private rights completely constituted cannot be affected by disallowance—Crown grant under Vancouver Island Settlers Rights Act (1904) read with amending Act of 1917—Grant remaining unregistered at date of disallowance but grantee entitled to registration at that date—Disallowance of Amending Act of 1917 cannot affect grantee's title—Conflict of laws.

The language of Sections 56 and 90 of the British North America Act of 1867 itself discloses with sufficient clearness an intention that as to private rights completely constituted and founded upon transactions entirely past and closed, the disallowance of a provincial statute shall be inoperative. It is important in construing such a provision to consider the probable tendency of any proposed construction in relation to its effect upon the working of the constitutional system set up by the British North America Act. If private rights that have been finally constituted under Provincial Legislation are swept away by disallowance which may take place at any time upto the expiration of a year after the enactment of the legislation the Provincial legislation may become the subject of a considerable degree of doubt as to its ultimate operation and effect. This uncertainty would be much limited in its practical incidence by recognized constitutional conventions restricting the classes of cases in which disallowance is permissible; but, in point of law the authority is unrestricted, and under conceivable conditions the uncertainty touching the fate of Provincial enactments might be productive of some degree of general inconvenience. Another objection lies in the probability that the Dominion Government when considering the advisability of disallowing a Provincial enactment in circumstances making the exercise of the power proper and desirable on general grounds would be faced at times with the certainty that in many cases that Government would encounter embarrassments (otherwise not likely to rise) by reason of apprehensions as to the consequences of its action upon the rights and interests of private individuals.

Under the Vancouver Island Settlers Rights Act of 1904 read with the amending Act of 1917, a Crown grant was made in favour of A. The registration of the grant was stayed in consequence of a lis pendens having been filed in certain actions which were not well founded. At this stage the amending Act of 1917 was disallowed by the Governor-General in Council.

Held: that the actions in which the lis pendens was filed being not well founded, A had when he applied for registration a completely constituted right to register his title and that such a right is one of the class of rights intended to be protected by Section 56 of the British North America Act. Therefore notwithstanding that at the time of the disallowance of the Amending Act of 1917, the grant was not registered. A's right to the land could not be extinguished by the disallowance of the Act of 1917.

—Construction—Instalment bond.

———Whole amount becoming due after two defaults —Condition precedent of demand was held not contemplated.

If on proper construction of the language employed on instalment bond, taking the whole document into consideration the Court should come to the conclusion that a demand was contemplated by the parties to be a condition precedent to the right to sue, then the demand cannot be regarded as merely technical but as being of the substance and no cause of action can be regarded as arising except on the condition being satisfied.

DEED—Construction—Intention of parties.

An hypothecation instalment bond provided for regular payment of instalments and in default of any two instalments it provided: "Whenever you desire you should realise the amount from the properties mentioned hereunder by proceeding against the property specified, by proceeding against our other property and by proceeding against ourselves."

Held: that as soon as the second default was committed, what the parties contemplated as due was the whole of the balance under the bond together with interest thereon without any reference to the provision with respect to instalments. It was impossible to read the document as though it contained a condition precedent, for the whole of the balance becoming due, that a demand should be made by the payees for the whole of the balance. The direction to the trustees in the trust in the settlement was to pay to the widow of the settlor within thirteen months of the settlor's death out of the balance of the "income accruing within the first thirteen months" the Rs. 80,000. The trustees were further directed to divide the remaining balance of the income "arising or accruing" during the first thirteen months after the settlor's death among the four beneficiaries named in equal shares. The direction in the deed operated under the form of a trust for sale. The balance of the proceeds of sale and income to be derived from it were to be held as subsequently directed "except the income arising or accruing due for and within the first thirteen months after the settlor's death," as to which there was reference back to the direction.

Held, the character of payments such as these directed is prima facie discontinuous at common law. No doubt, the settlor could have given directions which would have modified this character, or at least, have deprived it of the consequences arising from its discontinuity. But such directions would have had to be clear and unambiguous in order to have the result of varying the rights defined by the general law. ———Lease described as permanent, at fixed rent and of hereditary nature indicates permanency—Clause for re-entry will change the nature of lease unless words prohibiting re-entry are clear—Right of entry is not repugnant to the title "kayamgeni chit."

In determining whether a lessor has a valid right of re-entry under a lease executed by him, the nature of the terms used for the description of the document, the clause with regard to the enjoyment of the property from generation to generation and the rent being a fixed rent would be of great value in the absence of clear words to the contrary. But in a lease of this kind the Court has to see what is the contract entered into by the lessor with the lessee. It is open to the lessee to surrender the land leased to him and it is also open to the lessor to contract with the lessee that the land should be available for him whenever he required it. The mere use of the word "Kayamgeni chit" would not take away the force of the recital in the document that the lessee should surrender the land whenever required by the landlord. In construing a document of this kind the whole of the document should be taken into consideration. ———The material clauses of a lease were :—

(1) The purpose of the lease was to enable the lessee to erect Gola house and to purchase and sell all sorts of commodities therein, or in other words to open his business therein ;

(2) The lease was not limited for any definite period but that it was a bemaiyadi lease or a lease without any term ;

(3) That the lessee shall not have the power to construct any pucca building without the express and written permission of the lessor and if that stipulation be violated and pucca building be raised by the lessee without such permission of the lessor, he, the lessee, shall be liable to be evicted ; and

(4) In case the lessee went to erect pucca building and to have a pucca well or Indara he shall have to do so according to the advice of the lessor.

Held, that the erection of pucca buildings for the business as well as for the purpose of residence was in the contemplation of the parties with the condition that permission for erecting pucca structures will have to be taken from the lessor, and that under these circumstances the inference is not unreasonable, that the lease in question was meant to be of a permanent character and not from year to year.

In consideration of Rs. 975 the raiyat of land put the plaintiff in possession and occupation of the land for a term of nine years. The plaintiff was to appropriate the produce and pay the rent to the landlord, that is to say, the plaintiff was to hold directly under the landlord and not by way of sub-lease under the raiyat. The term of the lease was to be extended automatically until the peshgi money was paid.

Held, that by this instrument the original raiyat transferred his raiyati right to the plaintiff who thereby acquired the right to hold the land for the purpose of cultivating it; and the defendant consequently ceased to be raiyat as long as the lease was outstanding against him. He had only the reversion of the raiyati interest on the expiry of the term of the lease, but during the term of the lease the raiyati interest was in the plaintiff. (Ross, J.). ———An agreement for a mortgage was made between the parties, the purpose of which was to arrange the terms upon which the respondent was to grant, for the true amount of the indebtedness, whatever this might be, a mortgage of property, which had formerly been the subject of an agreement for sale and partnership between the parties. Following on the agreement a draft mortgage was in fact prepared purporting to carry out its terms, was approved by solicitors on behalf of the respondent, and the mortgage itself was actually engrossed and the stamp paid for by the respondent.

Held, that the property being identified and the terms of the loan being fixed, the document constituted an agreement which equity would enforce, unless there were circumstances which the Court would consider sufficient to justify the unqualified refusal on the defendant's part to carry out its terms, that there was a valid agreement charging the property with whatever sum was actually due, together with interest, and that a proper mortgage ought to be executed to carry out those terms, for nowhere was the binding effect of the agreement made conditional on fixing the amount of the debt, so that it would be wholly inoperative unless this was first done, and the fact that the action was begun before the account was settled does not ———Award partitioning property between J and S —S to pay certain amount to J and not entitled to alienate his share till such amount is paid—No charge is created on S's share for the amount.

One instalment of Rs. 7,000 was paid and no further instalments were paid at all. It was contended that by the award a charge or a mortgage was created in favour of J.

Held, that the words in the award themselves did not create either a mortgage or a charge. So far as the mortgage is concerned the award not being an act of parties it is difficult to see how any mortgage could be created at all. It is sometimes difficult to draw the line between a mortgage with possession and a lease where a premium is recovered by the lessor. But where a premium is taken, which premium is to be worked off by the enjoyment of the produce for 30 years and a portion of the produce is to be given to the executants of the document and there is no liability to account for the rents and profits, nor is there any question of redemption on payment of any money and all that the document requires is that an account should be kept as regards the payment of the kist to Government and of the various expenses, the transaction is a lease and not a mortgage. 25 All. 115 (P.C.), Foll. (Kumaraswami Sastri and Devadoss, JJ.). —Construction—Principles—Letters of Credit.

———Letters of credit are defined—Liberal construction is permissible only if there is scope for construction.

While no set form of words may be necessary yet a letter of credit as known to the law must contain a request (general or special) to pay the bearer or person named, money, or sell him some commodity on credit, or give him something of value, and look to the drawer of the letter for recompense, and it partakes of the nature of a negotiable instrument. The rules governing bills of exchange and negotiable promissory notes are always the same, fixed and determinate; while letters of credit are to be construed with reference to particular and often varying terms in which they may be expressed, the circumstances and intentions of the parties to them, and the usages of the particular trade or business contemplated. Letters of credit are accordingly not construed with technical nicety, but are considered as being usually framed with more or less informality and looseness of expression, and hence Courts have sometimes indulged in considerable freedom of interpretation in the effort to arrive at what is designated as the true intention of the parties. Instruments of this sort ought to receive a liberal interpretation. The words should receive a fair and reasonable interpretation, so as to attain the objects for which the instrument is designed and the purposes to which it is applied. There is room for this principle, only when the provisions of the agreement are ambiguous, loose, or susceptible of more than one fair interpretation; if it admits of two fair interpretations and the guarantee has advanced money on the faith of that most favourable to his rights, that interpretation will prevail. The expression "confirmed irrevocable credit" does not amount to a guarantee of the solvency of the person for whom letter of credit is passed. (Mookerjee and Rankin, JJ.). Where an estate was given to the widows of a certain deceased Raja and it was provided that on the death of the last surviving widow, the daughter of the Raja or failing her the next heirs of the Raja would inherit that property and where the daughter predeceased the last surviving widow.

Held: that ordinarily the words "next heirs" would refer to the heirs next after the daughter but that in this case, owing to the death of the daughter before that of the last surviving widow, the next heirs were the nearest heirs of the Raja and not the heirs next after the daughter.

the parties to the agreement, its subject-matter, and the apparent purpose and object thereof, and in particular the provisions to be construed.

At the conclusion of the War the Government of South Australia was faced with the problem of dealing with numbers of discharged soldiers, and determined to make provision for the settlement of such men on unoccupied Crown lands and for advances out of public funds to men so settled.

The respondent, a discharged soldier, who had some training on a Government training farm, by a letter applied for a grant of the lands in question. His application was granted. He later on accepted an agreement over the land which was to be for a term of 65 years, and thereby the vendor agreed to sell and the purchaser to purchase the land as therein described. One of the conditions in the agreement was: "If at any time within the period of ten years from the date of this agreement the vendor is satisfied on such evidence as he deems sufficient that by reason of incompetency or personal disability the purchaser is incapable of managing the said land with advantage to himself or that the purchaser has neglected to work the land satisfactorily or has been guilty of serious misconduct during his occupation thereof, the vendor by notice in writing given to the purchaser may determine this agreement upon and subject to such terms and conditions as the vendor thinks fit (and) upon the expiration of three months from the giving of such notice the agreement and the right of the purchaser to complete the purchase and possession of the said land shall cease and determine and be void, anything in this agreement to the contrary notwithstanding."

It was contended that before deciding to terminate the agreement it was incumbent upon the vendor to institute some judicial or quasi judicial enquiry or at the least to communicate to the purchaser the information he had received and his intention to act thereon and give him an opportunity of stating his case in answer thereto.

Held: that no such enquiry was contemplated that the vendor was exercising a merely administrative function and was entitled to form an opinion on such materials as he himself thought sufficient. (Lord Warrington of Clyffe). G. R. LAFFER v. F. A. GILLEN. 107 I.C. 347=A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 275.

———Later clause destroying obligation created by earlier one should be rejected—But if later clause merely qualifies earlier one both should be read together.

If in a deed an earlier clause is followed by a later clause which destroys altogether the obligation created by the earlier clause is to be rejected as repugnant and the earlier clause prevails. (1843) 5 Man. & C. 736, referred.

But if the later clause does not destroy but only qualifies the earlier, then the two are to be read together and effect is to be given to the intention of the parties as disclosed by the deed as a whole. (1877) 6 C. D. 544, referred.

In the latter case there could be no question if the later provision of the deed were introduced by the word "but" or the words "provided always nevertheless," or the like. But there is no necessity to find any such words. If a later clause says in so many words or as matter of construction that an earlier clause is to be qualified in a certain way, effect can be given and must be given to both clauses.

Where the first clause provides that in consideration of a certain sum payable in certain instalments the contractor will furnish certain materials and perform certain services and the second clause says that in a certain event that sum is not to be paid, that the agreement is to be at an end and payment is to be made only for labour expended, the operation of the first clause is qualified by the second clause. Where there is a third clause whose effect is to make the certain sum mentioned in the first clause an estimated sum whose accuracy is to be tested and controlled by taking the accounts for which provision is made in the third clause, the first and third clauses can be read together and the intention disclosed by the deed as a whole can be given effect to. ———Endorsements—Intention of parties must be gathered only from recitals in document—Interpreting one deed by recitals in another is not safe.

In construing Pharmanas and grants great weight ought to be attached to the actual words used in the grant than to an endorsement which is brief and simple and may not fully express the intention of the grantor. In interpreting deeds and contracts the intention of the parties to the document should be gathered only from the recitals in the document to which they are parties and not from what they said or did before the document was executed.

It is not a safe principle to interpret one document by referring to the recitals in another document. A Gadi Nashin Mahant executed a document with the intention that there should be no ill-consequence to the mutt as he was not conversant with the custom and had no insight into the management of the properties pertaining to the Gadi. It stated that on account of the affairs of the Gadi he could not prosecute his studies well. It further provided as follows: "It is also my intention that I should sever my connection with it and pass my days for sometime out station and prosecute my studies and acquire the qualification of Gadi Nashin Mahanth. Therefore, I return to my Guru G. all the powers which I had acquired for good management of the Gadi and the property appertaining thereto." ———Document called lease but on proper construction appearing to be sale—Court is not bound to hold it to be lease—Real nature of transaction must be looked into.

Merely because a document is called lease or a will, although on its proper construction it appears to be something else the Court is not bound to hold it to be that which it calls itself. The Court must look to real nature of the transaction.

H, an occupancy tenant transferred his holding to D. On H's deat,h P brought a suit for possession against D. P, contended that the deed of transfer executed by H was sale-deed and as such the sale was void, while D said that it was a perpetual lease and also put up plea of adverse possession, namely that P had not proved possession within 12 years.

Held: that the document purported to be a perpetual lease of an occupancy holding transferring all the rights of the occupancy tenant without any right of re-entry for ever to the lessee on the payment of a certain sum and an annual sum which was equivalent to land revenue due to Government. Nothing therefore was left to the lessor and the transaction was in fact a sale and not a lease. The transaction being void could not be challenged by P. Unless the property transferred can be considered to be no more than a security and the money advanced as a loan the transaction cannot be characterised as a mortgage. Therefore, if one deed conveys in explicit terms all right, title and interest of the vendor without any reservation of any kind and a second deed merely gives a right of repurchase to specified individual, namely the vendor and his lineal male descendants, the right is not one which can run with the land nor can it enure to the benefit of the legal representative of the vendor. When the question with reference to two documents, e.g., A and B executed almost simultaneously, one purporting to be a sale and the other an agreement to re-sell, is, whether the transaction is a mortgage or whether it is merely a sale with an agreement to repurchase, the case has to be decided on the instruments and the language employed in them having regard to the surrounding circumstances. No oral evidence is admissible to prove the real meaning or intention of the parties and not even the subsequent conduct of the parties can be looked at or regarded for the purpose.

Where it was found that at the time of execution of the documents A and B the property was impending sale, that it was sold under the first document A for comparatively low price, that the vendors under A were plaintiffs and one P a prior mortgagee while the persons who were entitled to the benefit of the contract under B were only the plaintiffs, that the actual possession of the property was only with the vendors even before the execution of a muchilika by plaintiff in favour of the defendant the opposite party, that there was no evidence of any bargaining for the price of the property, there was no reliable evidence with regard to the inspection of the property or the examination of the title-deeds before concluding of the transaction, that the creditor while speaking of the amount paid always used the expression "advance the amount" and it was further found that the document B, namely the agreement to re-sell, provided after the expiration of the said period you will claim no right or privilege whatever to this agreement or to the properties detailed below and I shall be in undisputed possession of the said properties.

The fact that the stamp paid on the document is one that was correct for a sale deed under the Indian Stamp Act is not in itself conclusive. The main thing to be considered is the terms of the document itself and the surrounding circumstances so far as they appear in evidence and are relevant in order to determine whether the real intention of the parties in executing a document was to enter into a mortgage transaction or a sale transaction. One of the main tests in construing a deed is the relation of the consideration mentioned in the document to the real value of the property transferred, and if the former sum is grossly inadequate, then it affords an indication that the vendor did not intend to sell the land out and out. If you are to get away from the plain terms of the contract you have to read into it something which is not there, and in order to entitle you to read into it something, there must be a state of things which appears from the evidence from the circumstances, from the extrinsic surroundings, to have been assumed by the parties to have been the foundation or basis of the contract, so that if that basis fails the contract becomes unenforceable, you have to ascertain from the surrounding circumstances recognised by both the contracting parties what is the substance of the contract and then to ask the question whether the substantial contract needs for its foundation the assumption of the existence of particular state of things. Therefore my uterine brother Kunja Lal, if alive at the time of my death, would get from my estate Rs. 25 per month and on his death his sons would get the said amount as monthly maintenance from the estate for life.

Held, that so far as the sons were concerned, the gift was not intended for any particular person but to all the sons of his brother, namely, to a class, and the sons should be considered as a unit for the purpose of the gift. The gift was not to descend to the heirs of the sons but to enure only for their lives, and so no question of the heirs of one of the donees being deprived could arise in this case.

There was no indication that the intention of the grantor was to make a separate grant of a proportional sum in favour of each of the sons; and upon a construction of the whole document it must be considered that the grant was to the sons of Kunja Lal as if they were one grantee with right of survivorship inter se. 33 All. 41 and 33 All. 665, Dist. (Chatterjea and Panton, JJ.). DEED—Construction—Will or Transfer.

—Construction—Will or settlement.

———A document was executed by a mother who was a widow, in favour of her son, which dealt with property to an extent of over three velis left to her by her husband under his will absolutely and recited that in respect of that, on account of the request made to her by her son for the benefit of his minor son and out of favour to himself and in consideration of the arrangement that he would not during her lifetime encumber or alienate the rights that would come to him in the property after her death, she on her side undertook to meet all her own expenses till her death out of the income and not to alienate the property. It directed that after the widow's death, the son and his heirs shall enjoy the property with all absolute rights. It further provided that if the widow failed to pay the kist on the property, the plaintiff shall pay and may recover from her out of her income, and that the pattah for the property shall be transferred to the plaintiff. The document was styled a settlement and registered.

Held: that from the tenor of the document it was not a will but a settlement and so subsequent transfer transactions between the parties should be, if possible, interpreted consistently with the document treated as a settlement: 33 Mad. 304; A. ———Document should if possible be construed in that manner in which effect will be given to all directions.

It is a well-established principle and rule of construction that a document should be construed if possible only in that manner or as being of that character in which it would be possible to give effect to all the directions contained in the document. If, regarded as a settlement it turns out that any of the directions in the document could not be possible of being given effect to, and if, regarded as a will, effect could be given to all the directions and there would be no difficulty whatever in carrying out the intentions of the maker of the instrument in any manner, then it follows that the construction that it is a will and not a settlement should be the one that is accepted. —Construction—Will or transfer.

———Document purported to be made inter vivos is ordinarily to be in favour of a particular defined person—But will comes to be made not in favour of defined person.

It is common knowledge that nearly all, if not all, documents probably without a single exception, executed by persons with the intention that they should come into operation immediately or documents containing dispositions made or purported to be made inter vivos always happen to be in favour of certain particular defined persons. Even a will often comes to be executed probably in accordance with this practice in favour of some particular individual. But generally speaking, it is a testamentary document that comes to be made not in favour of particular persons but merely for the purpose of effecting the dispositions therein contained. (Srinivasa Aiyangar and Ananthakrishna Aiyar, JJ.). PASUNGILIA PILLAI v. ISAKKIMUTHU PILLAI. 111 I.C. 22= A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 349.

DEED—Construction—Will or Transfer.

———One conclusive test as to whether a document was intended to take effect inter vivos or not, would be to see whether any irrevocable interest is thereby created immediately in favour of some other person. The question can arise only in respect of documents where the property is directed to go to the donee after the death of the maker of the instrument. In the case of a will, as it speaks only from the death of the testator, the disposition could only begin to take effect from time to time. But a disposition in presenti can be made vesting property in a third person on the death of the maker of the instrument, the distinction being that the interest in the latter case, though it comes into possession after the death of the maker, vests immediately. It may also be useful in connexion with such a question to consider whether the interest that the maker of the instrument reserves to himself should be regarded as reserved or retained by virtue of the instrument itself or merely by reason of there not having been any disposition of the property. ———Most important test is to see whether power to revoke the conveyance is reserved.

Although a document which is not a Will in form may yet be a Will, in substance and effect; but if an instrument is a deed in form, in order to hold that it is testamentary or in the nature of a Will, there must be something very special in the case, and unless there are circumstances which compel the Court to treat an instrument in the form of a deed as a Will, the Court will not do so.

The line between a Will and a conveyance reserving a life-estate is a fine one, and it would be hard to define; the easy and most important test to apply is to see whether the power to revoke is reserved or not. (Curgenven, J.). (GARAPATI) GANGARAJU v. PENDYALA SOMANNA.

———"Commercial terms."

(Obiter). The expression "commercial terms," as used in a deed is relative to the time and the place, the country and part of the country where the money is borrowed, the kind of security that is offered for the loan, the possibilities of realizing the security, the supply of capital and the opportunity of persons willing to lend for possibly a considerable time. It cannot be confined, as in England, to something connected with a publicly announced and official rate of interest for loans generally or to a current rate generally allowed upon the highest security in financial transactions, such as an issue of debentures or something regulated by the day to day supply of money and by facilities for short loans. The word "commercial" must be understood of a community which is not a commercial community and of transactions which no one

There was a dispute and it was referred to a person daily engaged in buying and selling the commodities contracted for as an assistant of a firm. ———Thavanai in bill of sale was held to mean credit period—Limitation Act, Art. 53.

The word thavanai was held to mean credit period and to place the suit for the price of goods sold and purchased within Art. 53 of the Limitation Act in the following circumstances:—In the bill for piecegoods purchased, sent by the vendor to the vendee, the following words were found at the top "debit interest at ¾ per cent. per mensem after 60 days thavanai." The question arose whether it was a credit sale or a cash transaction when the plea of limitation was set up as a defence to the suit for the money due, and it was held to be a credit transaction.

DEED—Construction—Miscellaneous.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The expression "Thavanai" has various meanings in various lines of business. Evidence is admissible under S. 98 of the Evidence Act to show the meaning it bears in the particular mercantile transaction in which it was used. When any such case is before the Court, the Court is bound to inform its mind not only by reference to well-known dictionaries but also by evidence of the meaning ordinarily given to it amongst those who use it. Even if the meaning of the word is a fixed period, Proviso 5 to S. 92 of the Evidence Act makes admissible oral evidence for the purpose of showing that by custom of a particular trade an incident not expressly mentioned in a contract is a term of that contract.

Per Jackson, J.—Thavanai is a colourless expression meaning only period. Proof aliunde is necessary for showing that it was used in a particular sense. (Venkatasubba Rao and Jackson, JJ.). K.M.P. R. N. M. FIRM v. M. SOMASUNDARAN CHETTY.

———"Wilful" in "wilful acts and defaults" is used not as a definition but as description.

The adjective "wilful" in "wilful acts or defaults" has evidently been used as a description and not as a definition. The idea intended to be conveyed is that the default is occasioned by the exercise of volition or as result of the non-exercise of will due to supine indifference, although the defaulter knew or was in a position to know that loss or harm was likely to result. The word does not necessarily suggest the idea of moral turpitude. The element of accident or inadvertence or honest error or judgment should also be eliminated. The default must be the result of deliberation or intent or be the consequence of a reckless omission. Wilful default therefore is indicative of some misconduct in the transaction of business or in the discharge of duty of omitting to do something either deliberately or by reckless disregard of the fact whether the act or omission was or was not a breach of duty: Forder v. *G.W. Upon the securities of the promissory notes executed by the company in favour of its directors who in their turn endorsed them in favour of the Imperial Bank of India, and also upon the securities of debentures issued by it in favour of the Imperial Bank creating charges upon all the company's undertakings, properties and assets including its uncalled capital, the company borrowed money from the Imperial Bank of India. The position as stated in one of the debentures was this: "The company in consideration of . . . now paid on loan to them by the Imperial Bank of India against certain securities authorised by Act 47 of 1920, do hereby as an integral part and collateral security for the said loan undertake to pay . . . "

Held: (1) on construction of the clause in "Memorandum" that the company was empowered to raise money by the issue of debentures and invest the same or any part of it;

(2) that the promissory notes were the original security and the other forms of security were when the loans were given collateral to that security so as to fall within the terms of Sch. 1, part 1, Cls. 5 and 6 of the Imperial Bank of India Act. One G who was the owner of a house and very considerable landed properties was in financial difficulties and needed a loan of 40 lacs of rupees. S borrowed the same from a bank, for the accommodation of said G and the latter on receipt of the sum executed a mortgage in favour of S for the purpose of securing the loan of 40 lacs, undertaking to pay interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum by equal monthly instalments with quarterly rests until payment. S had agreed to obtain the loan amount at the instance of three persons A, P and C who guaranteed to S the payment by G of the said sum of 40 lacs to the limit of their aggregate liability to the extent of 18 lacs of rupees each being liable for six lacs of rupees. The deed was the deed of continuing guarantee. The deed recited among other things "that within the aforesaid limit of liability this guarantee shall extend to and be applicable to the whole debt that shall ultimately be due to you from the said G in respect of such advance as aforesaid "and not merely to so much whereof as shall be co-extensive with our aforesaid maximum liability thereunder." It was also agreed between S and the sureties that should the common liability be less than the said maximum aggregate sum of 18 lacs of rupees, the share due from each one of them, in respect thereof should be in strict proportion to the individual liability of each of the appellants as referred to above. Payment was demanded and G having failed a notice was served on the sureties of the demand and subsequently a suit was filed.

Held: that construing the terms of the guarantee as a whole to liability under the guarantee did not attach until the creditor had pursued their remedies under the mortgage and the proceeds of the sale were proved to be insufficient to satisfy G's outstanding indebtedness to S in respect of the loan. The property originally belonged to one T who gave it to A by will authorising her to execute a settlement deed in favour of such of A's younger sister's sons as she might take as Abhiman Putra before her death. A in pursuance of the power thus delegated executed a deed of settlement in favour of V her sister's son. As I have taken you (that is V) as Abhiman Putra and as I have affection for you and as you have to protect me and perform my funeral ceremonies when I die I hereby give you the properties mentioned in the schedule. You shall own and enjoy the said property with all rights of deed and gift, etc. I have put you in possession of the said property and you shall pay the Sarkar kist." It was alleged that in the draft settlement instead of V, N's his brother's name was inserted. A a few days before her death went to V's house and died there. The settlement deed was produced by the assignee of V, the obsequial ceremonies were performed by V. Afterwards a trust deed was executed between K.P.R., for himself, and as head and manager of the undivided family of the one part, and V.M.S. of the other part. By the terms of this deed V.M.S. was given "a right over," by way of trust, all the properties, assets and interests mentioned in the schedule attached thereto for the purpose of selling the same. The trust-deed contained other powers, such as management the appointment and removal of agents, including the agents then working. One M.S.M. was appointed co-adjutor to counsel and advise the trustee, and it was provided that the trustee should obtain the consent in writing of the co-adjutor before appointing agents, or selling or mortgaging immovable properties in connexion with the trust.

The co-adjutor mentioned in the trust-deed died and no other co-adjutor, was appointed. After this, V.M.S. purporting to act as trustee by virtue of the powers conferred upon him by the trust-deed, appointed the said S his agent to transact, conduct and manage the affairs.

S, by a registered deed, purported to sell to E.N. M.K. the properties in suit.

Held: that the power-of-attorney given by the trustee to S was of no effect, as far as the sale of immovable properties was concerned, inasmuch as the trustee had not obtained the consent in writing of a co-adjutor to the sale thereof as provided by the deed the first co-adjutor having died and no successor to him having been appointed.

Held, further on the construction of the trust-deed, that the properties in the suit were not transferred to the trustee and that the authority given to S prior to the trust-deed to sell the property was not terminated by reason of that trust-deed.

Held, further, that the question whether the power-of-attorney executed prior to the deed of trust was still effective at the time S conveyed the property to the first respondent was a mixed question of law and fact. ———Dissolution of partnership-at-will—First partner appointing agent to settle accounts with second partner—Agent not authorised to refer to arbitration—Document between Agent and second partner ending in finding of balance due from second partner to the first partner and in statement by the Agent that he received the balance in settlement of accounts—Proceeding between agent and second partner was held a settlement of accounts and not arbitration ending in award.

One of the two partners in a partnership exercised his right under the articles of partnership to determine the partnership at will. He gave a power of attoney to another. This power of attorney did not authorise the man to appoint an arbitrator on behalf of his employer or to submit disputes to arbitration in accordance with a clause in the articles of partnership, but it authorised him, in discussion with the other partner to settle the accounts of the partnership, to collect what money he could, and to sue for any balance which might be found due on the taking of an account. The partnership having been brought to an end, proceedings took place between this man and the other partner. The document that was drawn up in the result ended in a finding of a balance in goods and in cash, due from the other partner to the one who had determined the partnership and in a statement signed by the agent, that he had received the goods and the cash in settlement. This proceeding was repeatedly called an arbitration ending in an award, by the opposite side, in the course of the litigation,

Held: on a construction of the document, and on the ground that the power of attorney authorised the agent to effect a settlement of accounts and to receive goods and cash in discharge but did not authorise him to submit the matter to arbitration, that the proceeding between the agent and the other partner was a direct settlement of accounts of all questions arising between the two partners and not an arbitration of a dispute followed by an award pronounced by the arbitrators. All may use the said Chowk according to the limits of their respective houses and inmates of all the four houses have the right of egress and ingress through the main Khadki door,"

Held: that the words 'Open Chowk belonging to these three houses' do not mean, having regard to the context, that the Chowk was to be in the exclusive ownership and possession of the three houses. The words 'all may use the said Chowk' meant all four houses and there they have the same meaning as the inmates of all the four houses referred to in the next sentence. ———Legal Practitioner—Signing a document, fixes signatory with knowledge of contents—A Vakil so signing cannot plead that he did not know the contents.

A man who signs his name to a document makes himself thereby in every way as responsible for it as if he was the original drafter of it. If it turns out that the document is one which no man acting honestly could in the circumstances have drafted, then he will be bound to answer for every word, line, sentence and paragraph, and it will not be the least defence that some body else wrote it out and he only signed it. Signature implies association and carries responsibility.

If a legal practitioner puts his signature to a document he will be deemed to have read it and to carry it in his recollection to the extent that an ordinarily competent, careful and reasonable man would carry it and he will be bound by all the implications arising from it just as much as if he had written every word of it with his own hand. Practitioners must realize that if they make or associate themselves with statements which they know are dishonest and untruthful for the purpose of misleading the Court they must on proof of misconduct bear personal responsibility and that it will be no defence for them to say that it was done in the interests of the client or at his instigation or at the instigation of a colleague at the Bar, or that they were so negligent in the matter that they did not read the document or consider it at all. ———Even alteration prejudicial to maker and beneficial to opponent if it affects integrity of deed is material alteration.

The test of material alteration is not necessarily whether the pecuniary liability of one of the parties have been increased by the change; it is of no consequence, whether the alteration would be beneficial or detrimental to the party sought to be charged on the contract. The important question is whether the integrity and identity of the contract have been changed.

The rate of interest to be charged is one of the most important conditions in any contract of borrowing or lending. ———Claim based on a bond materially altered is untenable—But one based on an original contract, not merged in the bond, may be decreed.

Per Newbould, J.:—Where there is a material alteration of the bond the claim based on it should not be decreed. (1 Sm. L. C. 767, Foll.). An implied contract to repay money lent arises from the fact that the money is lent even though no express either written or verbal is made to repay it. The material alterations of a written contract destroy the original deed if the debt is merged in the written contract. If the written contract is a negotiable instrument this should usually happen. But in the case of a simple bond the alteration prevents a suit being based on the bond and the question whether a suit would lie on the original debt depends on whether there is a separate contract which can be proved apart from the bond.

Per Rankin, J.:—An independent cause of action must be shown if the doctrine 'that no suit can be decreed on the basis of a bond' materially altered is not to take effect. (Newbould and Rankin, JJ.). DULA MEAH v. MANHAVI ABDUL RAHAMAN.

———Evidence Act, S. 91—Claim based on a bond materially altered is untenable—But one based on an original contract, not merged in the bond, may be decreed.

DEED—Material Alteration.

Per Newbould, J. :—Where there is a material alteration of the bond the claim based on it should not be decreed. (1 Sm. L.C. 767, Foll.). An implied contract to repay money lent arises from the fact that the money is lent even though no express promise either written or verbal is made to repay it. The material alterations of a written contract destroy the original debt if the debt is merged in the written contract. If the written contract is a negotiable instrument this would usually happen. But in the case of a simple bond the alteration prevents a suit being based on the bond and the question whether a suit would lie on the original debt depends on whether there is a separate contract which can be proved apart from the bond.

Per Rankin, J. :—An independent cause of action must be shown if the doctrine 'that no suit can be decreed on the basis of a bond materially altered' is not to take effect. Verbal negotiations leading up to an express contract in writing cannot be set up as an independent contract and are not even admissible in evidence. Moreover where there is an express promise an implied promise will not be inferred. (Newbould and Rankin, JJ.). DULA MEAH v. ABDUL RAHAMAN. 81 I.C. 641= 28 C.W.N. 70=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 452.

———Burden as to time of alteration lies on him who puts the same in evidence—Alteration in material particulars avoids the deed—Evidence Act, S. 101.

A writing which is intended to be under hand only can be altered by erasure or interlineation or otherwise before it is signed but it lies upon the party who puts the instrument in suit to explain the alteration and show when it was made. An alteration made while the instrument is in the custody of one party although not made with his knowledge or consent has the same effect in avoiding the instrument as if made by him, on the principle that he who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit is bound to preserve it in its original state. ———Material alteration must be one which changes legal effect of document.

A material change or alteration of an instrument is one which causes it to speak a language different in legal effect from what it originally spoke. Accordingly, any act which changes the legal effect of the instrument, that is, which changes the legal identity or character of the instrument, either in its terms or in the relation of the parties to it, is a material change or technically an alteration. It is the effect of the act upon the instrument and not the particular manner in which it is done, that is material, and hence an alteration to be material must be an actual alteration, whether by erasure, interlineation, addition or substitution of material matter affecting the identity of the instrument or contract; it must

After the summonses to the defendants had been issued and served, P, a co-sharer in the village executed a deed of gift in favour of S, in respect of a very small amount of the property in the village enabling thereby to resist, the claim of the plaintiffs on the ground that he (S.) was already a co-sharer in the village and therefore no suit for pre-emption was maintainable against him,

———An application to file a reference under Cl. 17 of Sch. II, C. P. Code is not a suit and it is doubtful if an application under clause 20 to file an award even when an agriculturist is a party, can be called a suit; but in any case it is not a suit of the description mentioned in S. 3, Cls. (w), (y) or (z) of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act and the Court can file the award to which an agriculturist is a party and on whose property a mortgage is created by the award, without adjusting accounts under Ss. 12 and 13 of the Act. ———Section 15-B does not make any exception in case of consent decrees. The fact that the decree is a consent decree should not be held to limit the powers of the Court. It is open to the Court in proper cases even when the decree is a consent decree to substitute system of instalments under S. 15-B to direct sale. (16 Bom. L. R. 668, Dist. from). But it is not open to the Executing Court to reduce the actual amount payable under the decree or the rate of interest, if such is awarded in the decree. What is open to it to do is to direct that the decretal amount be paid in instalments instead of being recovered immediately by sale. Those instalments must be calculated at such a rate that they would enable the capital and interest payable under the decree to be paid off in full during the period settled for the payment of instalments. The mortgage can only be redeemed once. A suit for accounts by such co-mortgagors under S. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act will not lie. But by reason of the definition of "agriculturist" in S. 2 (2) that determination may also import the determination of the status at the date when the liability arose. Where no question of jurisdiction is involved the mere failure to appear and urge the status at the hearing of the suit does not preclude the defendant from urging that he is ——As under the Indian Divorce Act (1869) amended by Act (25 of 1926), the Courts in India cannot pass a decree for divorce in cases of persons resident in India but not domiciled therein, and as the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act passed by the British Parliament in 1926 validates only decrees passed and confirmed under the Indian Divorce Act prior to 15th December, 1926, the Indian Courts cannot confirm, after the passing of the English statute and the amendment of the Indian Act, where the parties are residents in India but domiciled in England, a decree nisi though the decree nisi may have been passed prior to the passing of the English statute. A decree of dissolution of marriage confirmed or made absolute after 25th March, 1926, the date when the amendment of the Indian Act came into force, would be a nullity, as the order of confirming or making absolute is itself a decree of dissolution, and the making of it is prohibited by the Indian Act of 1926 in cases where the parties to the marriage are not domiciled in India at the date of presentation of the petition. As such a decree cannot be made —Proof of adultery.

———Where adultery with a named person is alleged but not proved the divorce petition must be dismissed. Mere submission by the wife that she had become pregnant by some unknown person and had miscarriage would not furnish her ground for divorce. Every petition under the Act must contain an allegation that the parties are domiciled in British India.

Per Marten, J.—Spouses can deny sexual intercourse even when living together but such evidence must be scrutinised with great care. Where a petition for divorce alleges adultery with a named person and also with person or persons unknown, leave to dispense with the named co-respondent must first be given by the Court before grant of relief. ———The question of domicile is one of intention, to be inferred from all the circumstances of a person's life, conduct, habits and so forth and a man is not to be considered as having taken up his fixed habitation in British India merely by reason of his residing there in His Majesty's civil or military service, or in the exercise of any profession or calling: In re Macright, (1886) 30 Ch. D. 165, Rel. on.

The mere expression of intention to acquire a new domicile is not enough to prove the change. There must be in addition such conduct on the part of the person claiming to have acquired the new domicile as to leave the Court in no doubt as to the reality and irrevocable character of his expressed intention: Winans v. Attorney-General, (1904) A.C. 287, Foll.

It is not that a person while serving in His Majesty's forces in India can never acquire a new domicile but that he must be deemed to retain his domicile of origin while so serving unless his conduct shows that he has intended to relinquish his original domicile for a new one: In re Macright, 30 Ch. —S. 4—Jurisdiction.

———Section 4 only continues the jurisdiction already possessed by High Courts at the date when the Act came into force. Section 10 confers jurisdiction on High Courts, and under this section the Oudh Chief Court has original jurisdiction in divorce cases, because where an Act says that a person may present a petition to a particular Court it must be inferred that it means that the Court shall have power to entertain and decide the petition. DIVORCE ACT (1869)—(As Amended by Act 25 of 1926)—S. 7—Intention.

—S. 7—Confirmation of decree.

———Decree nisi for dissolution of Marriage—Respondent not served with the petition—Uncorroborated testimony of petitioner in respect of the charges of adultery and cruelty—High Court will not confirm decree.

It is contrary to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England acts and gives relief, to act on the uncorroborated testimony of a petitioner either to establish adultery or cruelty. (Schwabe, C. J., Oldfield and Phillips, JJ.). K. L. A. PAYNE v. A. A. PAYNE. 70 I. C. 43=16 M. L. W. 16=A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 350=42 M. L. J. 562.

—S. 7—Duty.

———In an exparte case it is not enough for one of the parties to come forward and say something exactly following the terms of the Act. The proper course, if there is no cross-examining pleader, is for the District Judge to ask sufficient questions to make it reasonably clear what the precise facts are on which the petitioner relies for the relief he claims. (Marten, C. J., Fawcett and Percival, JJ.). EDITH WALSH v. EDWARD WALSH. 101 I.C. 388=29 Bom. L.R. 308=A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 230.

—S. 7—Duty of Court.

———The Court, while exercising its discretion in matrimonial cases, must have regard not only to the rights and liabilities of the matrimonial person wronged, and of the wrong-doer respectively inter se but also to the interests of society and public morality. The Court should endeavour to promote virtue and morality and to discourage vice and immorality. It ought not to limit or restrict that discretion by laying down rules within which alone the discretion is to be exercised: English cases considered. (Mears, C. J., Walsh and Kendall, JJ.). JAMES PETER SHERRING v. SHAHZADI SHERRING JACKSON. 108 I.C. 117=50 All. 464=26 A.L.J. 153=A.I.R. 1928 All. 338.

—S. 7—Intention.

———Crump, J. (contra Marten, J.)—There is the possibility of reading into S. 7 an intention on the part of Legislature to adopt whatever test the Court of Divorce in England might from time to time lay down upon the matter of divorce but that is a forced and unnatural construction. Also it would be necessary to omit the words "Subject to the provisions contained in this Act..." Indeed, had the Legislature intended, any such result, it would have been easy to say in express terms that the provisions of the Act must be read as subject to the rules and principles applied from time to time by the Matrimonial Courts in England... They have chosen to say precisely the contrary. Any such construction would introduce an element of uncertainty where certainty is essential. The doctrine of English Courts has varied from time to time upon this point. Since 1895 domicile alone is recognized as conferring jurisdiction.

S. 7 is a residuary section intended to provide for any matters which by inadvertence or otherwise are not expressly dealt with in the Act. It is not unusual in statutory drafting to insert provisions of this nature ex majore cautela more especially where an attempt is being made to codify in this country an unfamiliar branch of English Law. The expression 'rules and principles' points rather to the rules and principles on which the Court deals with these matrimonial causes in requiring a certain degree of evidence and other cognate matters. (Macleod, C. J., Marten and Crump, JJ.). ALFRED WILKINSON v. GRACE WILKINSON. 77 I.C. 654= 25 Bom. L.R. 945=47 Bom. 843= A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 321.

—S. 7—Principles and rules.

———The words "principles and rules" in S. 7 means principles and rules of law of evidence, of interpretation, of practice, and of procedure but not statutory provisions nor statutory rules. The principles and rules to be applied are by the words of the section made subject to the provisions of the Act; they can never run counter to the Act. (Phillips and Reilly, JJ.). B. ISWARAYYA v. SWARNAM ISWARAYYA. 1929 M.W.N. 831=31 M.L.W.97= A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 154=58 M. L. J. 29.

———It is very doubtful whether the expression "principles and rules" mentioned in S. 7 of the Act is intended to include such an important matter as the rule defining the jurisdiction of the Indian Courts. The section is merely a residuary section and it seems that the Legislature, after making express provisions for various matters relating the matrimonial causes, intended by means of this section to apply the English Law to such matters of miscellaneous character as were not expressly dealt with by the Act. The opening words of S. 7 "subject to the provisions contained in this Act" expressly save the rule relating to jurisdiction contained in S. 2 of the Act. A, I. R. 1923 B. 321, Ref. (*Shadi Lal, C. ———The Court may act on the admissions of the wife although they are not supported by any other evidence. But to rely entirely upon such admissions is highly dangerous, as collusion between husband and wife is quite possible. ———In divorce cases, the Court is bound to act on the principles followed by the Divorce Courts in England. Adultery on the part ofthe petitioner is very rarely condoned by the Court. Where the adultery is committed in ignorance of fact, as where a petitioner whose wife had left him married again in the belief that his wife was dead, the Court may grant relief. Another ground recognised is, where a petitioner acts in ignorance of law, as, where a man marries again after decree nisi has been passed, but before it was absolute in the bona fide belief that his marriage had already been dissolved. Another class of cases in which discretion may be exercised is where the wife commits adultery in consequence of threats and personal violence by which she is coerced into committing a fault. The last case is where the petitioner commits adultery to the knowledge of the respondent but which the respondent long since pardoned and condoned. Cases are not to be decided on grounds of sympathy, but on the judicial exercise of the discretion which the law confides to the Courts. (Robinson, C.J. and Maung Gyi, J.). —S. 19—Syphilis.

———Existence of syphilis in one party to marriage is ground for rescission of marriage contract.

Where syphilis is contracted, prior to but was not known to exist at the time the contract to marry was entered into, or where such disease was contracted subsequent to the making of the contract to marry, but through no wrongful act of the defendant, its existence furnishes a good defence to an action for breach of promise. The affliction is to be of a serious type, and perhaps, incurable, the rule may well be otherwise where the disease is such as to be easily curable and where the plaintiff assents to a postponement of performance.

The two principal ends of matrimony are, a lawful indulgence of the passions to prevent licentiousness, and the procreation of children, according to the evident design of Divine Providence. Permanent and incurable impotency existing at such time and such nature as to render complete and natural sexual intercourse between the parties practically impossible is recognised as a ground for the annulment of the marriage. Similarly incurable syphilis is a ground for annulling marriage. The existence of such diseases in either party at the time of the marriage renders the marriage voidable.

In such cases a divorce may be decreed on the ground of cruelty. To constitute such a ground of cruelty, it is usually required that the disease should have been actually communicated to the complainant, that the complainant should have been ignorant of the existence or nature of the defendant's disease at the time of its communication, and that the defendant should have infected the petitioner knowingly and wilfully. If all these facts are established no question can obviously arise as to the propriety of granting the divorce, unless there are facts showing a condonation of the offence.

Sound public policy would not permit an extension of the rule to cases where the disease is easily curable. It is the permanent or probably permanent character of the malady, rendering sexual intercourse impracticable throughout the continuance of the marriage, that furnishes the reason for the annulment, and the maxim should apply cessante rationae cessat lex ipsa.

The existence of syphilis in one of the parties furnishes a good ground for divorce to the other.

DIVORCE ACT (1869)—(As Amended by Act 25 of 1926))—S. 32—Ordinary suit for.

Concealment of a loathsome and incurable form of syphilis is recognised as a fraud sufficient to warrant divorce or annulment, specially where the existence of the disease is discovered by the other party before the marriage is consummated and the parties immediately separate, that such disease must be actually or probably incurable.

There should be a proper medical examination of the person of the party alleged to be afflicted. Where a party refuses to attend for medical inspection, the Court may properly draw an unfavourable inference. The Courts naturally exercise a wide discretion in ordering physical examination and always do so, subject to such conditions as will afford protection from violence to natural delicacy and sensibility. ———It is easy for a wife, who has some grievance against her husband, to say that she would rather take an allowance and live apart from him but it is not the object of the law to make such separations easy. Where the husband has shown himself to be suspicious, jealous and occasionally violent but it is not proved that he is unfaithful or that he has failed to support her or her children in decency or that he is habitually cruel. It is neither for her advantage nor in the interest of justice that she should be given a separation from her husband under such circumstances. (Pullan, J.). G. C. FOSTER v. A. B. ———The object of awarding damages against an adulterer is not to punish at all. All that the law permits to be given is compensation for the loss which the husband has sustained. That is the only guide to the amount of damages to be given. But if it is proved that a man has led a happy life with his wife, that she has taken care of his children, that she has assisted in his business, and then some man appears upon the scene and seduces the wife away from her husband, then those facts will be taken into consideration. If the adulterer did not seduce her away from her husband that makes a very material difference in considering the amount of damages to be given. In considering these questions the conduct of the husband must be looked to.

——As under the Act (1869) amended by Act (25 of 1926), the Courts in India cannot pass a decree for divorce in cases of persons resident in India but not domiciled therein, and as the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act passed by the British Parliament in 1926 validates only decrees passed and confirmed under the Indian Divorce Act prior to 15th December, 1926, the Indian Courts cannot confirm, after the passing of the English statute and the amendment of the Indian Act, where the parties are residents in India but domiciled in England, a decree nisi though the decree nisi may have been passed prior to the passing of the English statute. A decree of dissolution of marriage confirmed or made absolute after 25th March, 1926, the date when the amendment of the Indian Act came into force, would be a nullity, as the order of confirming or making absolute is itself a decree of dissolution, and the making of it is prohibited by the Indian Act of 1926 in cases where the parties to the marriage are not domiciled in India at the date of presentation of the petition. As such a decree cannot be made under the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act, as amended by Act No. 25 of 1926, it would not be rendered valid by S. 3, Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act. In a suit by a zamindar against several inamdars to recover compensation for the unauthorised use by the defendant of the water of the plaintiff's tank for the second crop on the defendant's inams the plaintiff admitted the defendant's right to use the water of the tank, for the 1st crop but denied their right for the second.

Held, that the right admitted by the plaintiff and claimed by the defendant was one of easement and that as the evidence established the defendant's user of the water of the suit tank for raising a second crop for twenty years and more the defendants were entitled to an easement by prescriptive right.

Held further, that as the whole decree was questioned in the revision petition and the finding of fact related to all the defendants the whole decree of the Court below against all the defendants, should, under O. 41, R. 4, Civil Procedure Code, be set aside though the revision petition itself had been preferred by only one of them. ———Right to drain water.

Water from the plaintiff's land was for nearly 25 years being discharged on defendant's land but as a Government channel divided the two the water was drained by means of a siphon sluice put up across the Government channel with the permission of the Government. The defendant obstructed the discharge. In a suit by the plaintiff to establish his right to drain off the water the Government was not a party but expressed its willingness to permit the plaintiff to continue to drain the water as before,

Held, that the plaintiff was not suing as agent of the Government but in his own right. ———Right to allow water to flow to lower land.

Natural right to let rain water on to lower adjacent land—Right whether extends to letting it through particular openings—Proof of prejudice—Onus.

Before the partition two plots of land belonged to a common proprietor; the land on which the plaintiff's house stood was on a higher level than that of the defendant. Subsequent to the partition a wall was built between the houses jointly by the two owners. In that wall an opening was made at the time of the construction.

Held, that the plaintiff had a natural right to allow rain water on his land to flow out to the adjacent tenement, and that he would allow it to flow through the opening in the common wall because the defendant had not shown that such a course involved an additional burden. Gibbons v. Lenfestey, 1 B. —Right of way.

———In India just as much as in England there are three distinct rights of way. First, there are private rights in the strict sense of the term vested in particular individuals or the owners of particular tenements and such rights commonly have their origin in grant or prescription. Secondly, there are rights belonging to certain classes of persons, certain portions of the public, such as the freemen of the city, tenants of a manner or the inhabitants of a parish village. Such rights commonly have their origin in custom. ———A public right of way in the full sense of the term and as to all King's subjects is unconnected with dominant tenements. Such right of way may be acquired by user of or dedication to the public in general. In this connection the fact that there were no thoroughfares at the termini is not of much importance on the point of dedication, but the question whether public in general use the way as pathway or only the inhabitants of the village or some other village do, are questions of considerable materiality. For where the privilege to use a road is enjoyed by a particular section of the public community or by inhabitants of two or three villages and not by others the road is not a public road. 25 W. ——— Those rights which having their origin in custom belong to certain classes of persons on certain portions of the public such as the inhabitants of a village are customary rights. They are not easements in the legal sense of the term. A right based on custom is established by proof of the custom and it is not necessary that there should be evidence from which a lost grant may be presumed. Moreover it is not necessary that a custom should be traced back for the whole time necessary to make it immemorial, whatever that time may be. The evidence must be sufficient to show that the right "has been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally by agreement or otherwise the usage had become customary law of the locality. The doctrine of the lost grant is applicable to private rights claimed by prescription. It is inapplicable to a right claimed on the basis of immemorial custom. It is inaccurate and slipshod to speak of the local understanding or agreement or practice which comes to be a local law or custom as a grant. The question of legal origin is only of importance where it is suggested that the right claimed might have originated within the time of memory, whatever that time may be. In the case of a custom its legality depends on such considerations as its reasonableness and its certainty. As to the length of user or enjoyment, which must be proved before a local custom may justifiably be inferred, perhaps no definite rule can be laid down. But if the existence of the custom depends on oral evidence, and the user or enjoyment is taken back as far as living memory can be expected to go, then in the absence of rebutting evidence it is not unreasonable to say Proesumitur retro or to infer immemorial enjoyment of the right. 17 All. 87; 20 Mad. 389; 23 Bom. 666, Ref. to. (Richardson and Suhrawardy, JJ.). ——The right to water flowing through artificial water courses is a right of easement, and must rest on some grant or some arrangement, either proved or presumed from, or with the owners of the land from which the water is artificially brought, or on some legal origin. It is quite distinct from the natural right, which, is a natural incident to the ownership of land, and entitles prima facie each successive riparian proprietor to the unimpeded flow of water of a natural channel in its natural course, and to its reasonable enjoyment as it passes through his land. In the case of artificial watercourse where no easement or customary right enjoyed by the plaintiff has been proved, but only diminution of supply (and not complete stoppage) the plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with his enjoyment. or otherwise improving it, the owner of the inferior is without the positive constitution of any servitude, bound to receive that body of water on his property. The lower heritor cannot object so long as the flow whether above or below ground is due to gravitation unless it has been unduly and unreasonably increased by operations which are in aemulationem vicini. But he is under no legal obligation to receive foreign water brought to the surface of his neighbour's property by artificial means; and there is no distinction in principle between water raised from a mine below the level of the surface of either property and water artificially conveyed from a distant stream. One landowner cannot by altering the condition of his land deprive the owner of the adjoining land of the privilege of using his own as he might have done before. The distinction between rural and urban areas drawn in 29 Mad. 539 arises from the accident that illustration (a) to S. 7 of the Easements Act instances a case of land in an urban area because it wishes to safeguard the statutory rights of urban authorities to restrict unapproved methods of dealing with land and buildings. But where originally the owner of higher land used to maintain a bund to prevent water flowing into his land through a creek in the bund of neighbouring river but by his neglecting to do so the water flowing through that creek, flows down into the lower land from the upper land, and the owner of the former erects a bund to prevent this water, this flow is a natural flow and the lower owner can be prevented by injunction from resisting it unless he has acquired a prescriptive right that the upper owner should maintain his own bund against the creek in proper repair; but it is equitable that the upper owner should be required to give undertaking to keep in proper repair his own bund.

In considering questions of easement of necessity, convenience is not the best but absolute necessity, and in this matter S. 13 (e) is the same as the law in England. A right of way of necessity only arises when there is no other possible legal mode of getting at the land and an easement of necessity which arises by implication of law is a grant of a right of way until such time as the grantee may acquire the power from some other source of reaching the quasi-dominant tenement. EASEMENTS ACT (1882), S. 13—Easement of Necessity.

———There cannot be an easement of necessity for enabling the dominant owner to enjoy another easement. An easement of necessity is not created merely when the easement is necessary, but when it is absolutely necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the dominant property and the mere fact of the properties having come under a common owner for a period of a year or so does not convert a right, which otherwise could not have been considered absolutely necessary for the enjoyment of the property an easement of necessity.

———The term 'quasi-easements' has been applied to those easements, which, not being easements of absolute necessity, come into existence for the first time by presumed grant or operation of law on a severance of two or more tenements formerly united in the sole or joint possession, or ownership, of one or more persons. The law relating to quasi-easements, arising on a division of joint property, is based upon the same principle which governs the conveyance of a part of the tenement held by a single owner or possessor. The principle is that on the grant by the owner of an entire property part of that property as it is then used and enjoyed there will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements, termed quasi-easements, which have been and are at the time of the grant in use for the benefit of the part granted. Such easements arise in favour of the grantee on several principles. As between co-parceners, mutual conveyances of the shares allotted to them respectively upon a partition of joint property, whether under the direction of Court of law or otherwise, will carry with them by presumption of law the right to such continuous easements as are necessary for the reasonable use and enjoyment of the premises respectively allotted. One of such easements is the right of support (including lateral support) which passes by implication of a law to a grantee, it is applicable to the case of a party wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other ———Partition—Water from plaintiff's site draining off across defendant's land before partition—Plaintiff was held not entitled after partition to drain off his water in a narrow channel across the defendant's land causing greater burden on defendant's land.

Before the partition it was unlikely that water flowed in any channel across the defendant's land and it would be likely to be absorbed as it would be spread over the whole area. Now that the whole amount of the water was concentrated into a narrow channel it imposed a burden upon the defendants of a very different nature to that which was in existence before the partition. It could not therefore be said that it was necessary for enjoying the plaintiff's share as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect. The burden cast upon the defendants was a more onerous burden than it was before, and the plaintiff was not entitled to the easement. (Phillips, J.). SINNAN GOUNDAN v. VEERAPPA GOUNDAN. 90 I. —S. 13—Transfer of easement.

———When a quasi-servient tenement is conveyed to the grantee, and the quasi-dominant tenement is retained by the grantor, quasi-easement cannot arise in favour of the grantor unless expressly reserved in his grant, inasmuch as the grantor by a grant for valuable consideration is, in the absence of such express reservation, taken to have relinquished all rights over the tenement granted, and to be thereby afterwards precluded from doing anything which derogates from his grant. Wheeldon v. Burrows, (1879) 12 Ch. ———The provisions of S. 13 and illustrations may be regarded as enunciating the principles of justice, equity and good conscience Where the owner of an entire tract of land, or of two or more adjoining parcels employs a part thereof, so that one derives from the other a benefit or an advantage of a continuous and apparent nature, and sells the one in favour of which such continuous and apparent quasi-easement exists, the easement, being necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, will pass to the grantee by implication. The principle has been applied to cases of transfer of two tenements, and it has been ruled that if the owner of an estate, part of which is quasi-dominant and part quasi-servient transfers the two portions to two different persons, the respective transferees will take the portions granted to them, burdened or benefitted, as the case may be, by those rights in the nature of apparent and continuous easements which the previous owner had the right to attach to them. This rule is held applicable where there are several grants not absolutely at the same moment, but so far at the same time that they are considered as one transaction. ———Customary right—Essentials.

A customary right to be established must be reasonable and it must be definite or certain. A customary right to bathe in a tank can be acquired by the residents of a village, but in order to establish such a right the evidence must be clear; the enjoyment must be as of right for a long number of years and in considering the evidence regard must be had to the habits and customs of the people. —S. 23—Conditions of enjoyment.

———A dominant owner may from time to time alter the mode and place of enjoying the easement, provided that he does not thereby impose any additional burden on the servient heritage. GAJADHAR v. KISHORI LAL. 97 I.C. 169=24 A.L.J. 810.

—S. 23—Rain water.

If the owner of the higher tenement has the right to pass on to the lower tenement all the rain-water that falls on his land, the mere fact, that in the course of improving his tenement he carried out works of drainage or other works, the result of which is that instead of the water being allowed to flow imperceptibly to the lower tenement gets collected and is passed by an artificial channel, is the result of a natural user by the owner of the superior tenement of his own land and the works of improving and the draining by him on his land could not be regarded as any acts done on his part which would have the effect of either changing the right or increasing the burden of the obligation corresponding to the right. Conceivably, therefore, if it should be found in any case that by reason of such collecting of the water and passing it on through an artificial cutting in the bund the obligation on the servient tenement is increased in an appreciable degree or if it should be found that the damage done to the servient tenement by such artificial drainage is appreciably in excess of the damage done when the water was passed merely naturally, it would follow that the owner of the lower tenement is entitled to object to the draining of the rain-water in that manner. It is on the assumption that the obligation of the owner of the servient tenement is not changed either in quality

Plaintiffs had a right to have their land irrigated by the water which passed through their land from the sluices which passed through defendant's land. Held, that defendants could not be allowed to build.

———Considerations.

To Courts governed by the Specific Relief Act, the question of injunction or no injunction presents itself in a different light to what it does to the English Courts and that to Courts subject to the Specific Relief Act the English decisions have no application. In India the Court has a discretion, it may—not shall—issue an injunction where the injury is such that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief. The good sense of Judges might be relied upon for adequately protecting rights to light on the one hand and freedom from unnecessary burdens on the other. There must be consideration for both sides in all these controversies. (Young, J.). MAHOMAD AUZAM ISMAIL v. JAGANNAD JAMNADAS. 87 I.C. 800=3 Rang. 230=A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 327.

———Conditions.

When injunction is asked for to restrain the threatened disturbance of an easement, the question for determination is whether the threatened disturbance of the easement would amount to a nuisance. A mere invasion of plaintiff's right of privacy is not sufficient to entitle him to an injunction. 30 Bom. 319, Foll.

There must be a threat of disturbance sufficient to cause substantial damage to the plaintiff, or in other words, it must amount to a nuisance, which in law implies substantial damage. The damage must not be merely sentimental or trifling: but in considering whether the property of the plaintiff is in fact injured or his comfort or convenience in fact materially interfered with, by an alleged nuisance, regard must be had to the character of the neighbourhood. ———In considering the questions of easements of necessity, convenience is not the test, but absolute necessity. They end with the necessity creating them. A way of necessity therefore is extinguished when the necessity terminates by the dominant owner acquiring adjoining property through which he can pass and repass to the old dominant tenement without reference to the servient tenement, and when once extinguished the dominant owner cannot revive it by any acts on his part. 33 All. 467; 19 Bom. 797; 4 C. —S. 46—Extinction—Test—Revival.

———The unity of the dominant and servient estates in the same person extinguishes the easement appurtenant to the dominant estate, for no person can have an easement on land which he himself owns. But unity of title of the two estates will not extinguish an easement, unless the ownership of the two estates be co-extensive, equal in validity, quality and all other circumstances of right. If one estate is held in fee and the other for a term of years, there is no unity of possession that will extinguish an easement of one estate as against the other; but the unity of possession in such cases will only suspend the easement during the time of such unity of possession. Consequently, an easement may be revived, after it has been extinguished by the union of the dominant and servient tenements in one owner by their subsequent severance, provided the easement is apparent, continuous and essential to the enjoyment of the dominant tenement. If there has been unity of possession merely an easement which has been thereby suspended will revive on severance of the union but if there has been unity of seisin for estates in fee simple and not unity of possession merely, all easements are absolutely extinguished and will not revive, unless they are re-created on severance of the former dominant and servient estates. ———Test.

The main test for deciding whether a person is a licensee of a property or a lessee is that of exclusive possession. If the effect of the agreement is to give exclusive possession to the holder, though subject to certain reservations then it is a lease, if the agreement is merely for the use of the property in a certain way and on certain terms while it remains in the possession and control of the owner it is a license: Glenwood Lumber Co. v. Phillips, (1904) A.C. 405; A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 228, Rel. on. (Mirza and Broomfield, JJ.). The difference between a lease and a license is that, in the case of a license there is no interest in immovable property transferred to the licensee: while in the case of a lease there is a transfer or carving out of such interest in favour of the person in whose favour the lease is granted. One chief consideration is whether there is any right of exclusive possession given. If the effect of the document is to give the holder an exclusive right of occupation of the land, it will be a demise of the land but it is not a mere question of words but of substance. The mere calling a document a license would not affect the question but in arriving at a conclusion where the terms are not clear, one has to see what the circumstances are to judge the intention of the parties. It is relevant to consider what the rights of the parties were and what the object of the agreement was. The mere fact that there are restrictive covenants would not by itself make a lease a license if the other terms are clear, but in considering what the intention of the parties was, it is relevant to see what control one party has over the property on which another party is allowed to do certain things.

Provisions that the grantor should have "free access at all times," that the grantee should not sub-let or transfer his rights without the grantor's consent, that upon the determination of the license the grantors might re-enter upon and re-take and absolutely retain possession, etc., do not establish a lease where the other terms and circumstances show that no interest in immovable property was transferred or that exclusive possession of land was not given. Conditions such as the ones referred to above, which restrict the licensee's rights and which, as the licensee cannot claim such rights even in absence of such provisions, are unnecessary in a license and would be natural in a lease, may be due to extra caution on the part of the parties and do not necessarily indicate that a lease was intended.

In this case, certain documents by which leave was given by a Railway company to stack coal on station yards were held to constitute a license and not a lease. (Spencer, Offg. C. J., Kumaraswami Sastri and Krishnan, JJ.). ACTING SECRETARY, BOARD OF REVENUE v. THE AGENT, SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY CO. 86 I.C. 688=48 Mad. 368= A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 434=48 M.L.J. 161 (F.B.).

———Construction.

It is essential to the creation of a tenancy of a corporeal hereditament that the tenant should have the right to the exclusive possession of the premises. A grant under which the grantee takes only the right to use the premises without exclusive possession operates as a license, and not as a lease. Having regard to the rights of a lessee, which are specified in S. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, in particular the rights to growing crops and to put up structures, it seems difficult to say that there could be a valid lease not of a definite area of immovable property but of an area the position of which varies from time to time. On the other hand, it may be said that "immovable property" (as defined in the General Clauses Act) includes not only land but benefits to arise out of the land so that there can be a lease of the benefit of keeping chattels, such as a car and carriage, within certain special limits although the place occupied by the chattels might vary from time to time. Ordinarily the law takes it that a case of that kind is not one of a demise, but that of a license. The mere fact that a person has had the exclusive use of a particular cubicle for two years and that it was the intention of the parties that no one else should use that cubicle so long as the person kept his car on the premises is not in law sufficient to show that the agreement was a demise or a lease and not a license. EJECTMENT—Burden of proof.

In a suit for declaration of title and possession, where plaintiffs establish their title to the land it is the duty of the defendant who sets up tenancy from one of the co-sharers to establish such a tenancy. If one of the plaintiffs is a purchaser from that co-sharer, defendant should show that the nature of the tenancy was such that it was binding upon the purchaser. Again, in order to make that lease binding against all the co-sharers, it is the duty of the defendant to establish satisfactorily that there was a partition between the co-sharers, before the alleged lease to himself under which his lessor obtained a complete title to deal with the land by way of a lease. If the defendant is successful in establishing a tenancy which would be binding against the plaintiff, the plaintiff would still be entitled to a decree declaring his title to the property and the liability of the defendant to pay rent to the plaintiff. —Joinder of parties.

———Co-trespassers.

———Principle regarding.

The principles governing the rule of joinder of defendants in an action for ejectment are mainly two: first, if any of the persons in possession is left out, he remains in possession as not being affected by the decree, and the decree as one in ejectment and for possession becomes infructuous because the persons ejected as being bound by the decree can always come in under the person who remains in possession; and second, there is a certain amount of risk involved in not making the persons in actual possession defendants, for, in execution of the decree, persons may happen to be turned out who may then bring actions against the plaintiff for wrongful dispossession, not being bound by the decree. Deo d. Williamson v. Roe, 10 Moore 493; Deo d. Lord Darlington v. Cock, (1825) 4 B. and C. 259; Deo d. Turner v. Gee, (1841) 9 Dowl. 612; Glen v. Herring, (1905) 1 K. A plea of jus tertii is no defence, unless the defendant can show that the act complained of was done by the authority of the owner. ———Evidence—Ejectment—Quantum of proof—Gora lands.

The nature and quality of the proof required to satisfy the burden cast upon a plaintiff may vary in different classes of cases. In the case of gora lands, that is to say, lands not brought under regular cultivation but which are from time to time, once in four or five years, subject to cultivation of certain classes of crops the evidence, which might be adduced by either party of acts of user is not such as one might expect would be forthcoming in cases of lands under regular cultivation and should not therefore be rejected on that account. ———Relative value.

Possession is prima facie proof of title; and it is well established that previous possession is a good foundation for a suit in ejectment, although the plaintiff who instituted the suit may not be able to establish any title in himself, provided that the defendant does not establish a better title to the disputed property: 6 Bom. 215, Foll.; 25 Bom. 287; 12 W.R. 164; A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 1, Ref.; 20 C.W.N. 773, Not foll. (Das and Ross, JJ.). —Miscellaneous.

———Suit for possession—Declaration of title unnecessary.

The institution of a suit for possession is sufficient to show the plaintiff's election to treat the alienation as a nullity and therefore a separate suit is unnecessary and even a separate suit for a declaration is inoperative; this rule applies even if the ejectment is sought in a revenue Court. ———Evidence and probabilities.

It is only in cases where there is no evidence of the plaintiff as to dispossession, or, where the evidence is valueless, that the plaintiff fails to make out his case by merely proving that he had an antecedent title and possession and it must not be considered that, merely because where evidence was given by both sides and the learned Judge who had to determine the case, had a difficulty upon that evidence or even considered that evidence not altogether satisfactory, he was not entitled to give weight to the probabilities of the case or to any presumptions which might properly arise from the fact that the plaintiff had previously been in possession and had title. Merely because the Judge has some difficulty in arriving at a conclusion upon the evidence or that he does not consider the evidence altogether satisfactory, he is thereby not precluded from looking either at the probabilities of the case as disclosed by other parts of the evidence or from the presumption which might arise from the plaintiff's title. —Canvassing.

———Is not a right.

A right to canvass for or against a candidate cannot be regarded as a special right of a voter and much less as part of the franchise of a voter. If indeed it be a right, it is a right which a voter enjoys perhaps with thousands of others who are non-voters and it is impossible to recognize or give effect to any such right in law. —Injunction.

———When to be granted.

It is impossible to lay down an exhaustive rule but generally speaking injunctions should be confined to preserving the status quo ante, to preventing irremediable damage or loss to the property in the suit, or to averting substantial injury. No such conditions arise where the Court is moved not to re-instate the unseated Councillor, but to unseat the Councillor declared elected in his stead; and thus create a vacancy in the Municipal Council pending a civil litigation in respect of that matter; in such case there is no ground for interference. In respect of a single vacancy to represent a constituency on a Taluk Board, there were three candidates for election, the plaintiff and defendant 2 being two of them. After defendant 2's nomination paper was filed, three nomination papers proposing the plaintiff were filed. Out of these one was rejected as the proposer had also subscribed as seconder the earlier nomination paper of defendant 2. The second was rejected because the seconder had as proposer subscribed the earlier nomination paper of defendant 2. The third was also rejected on the ground that the same voter, who had subscribed as proposer plaintiff's second nomination paper had also subscribed as proposer the third nomination paper, the President, being of opinion that the moment the voter subscribed paper No. 2, his right became completely exhausted and he had no further right to sign his name on any subsequent nomination paper. Plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was validly nominated and for an injunction, restraining the President from holding the election.

Held, that where the rules enact that no voter shall be at liberty to nominate more candidates than there are vacancies, what is sought to be prevented is that no voter shall nominate a larger number of candidates than there are vacancies and not that a voter shall be forbidden from subscribing more than one nomination paper in favour of the same candidate. —Second election.

———Where a candidate, who stands next in rank and who challenges an election, claims the seat and the disqualification under which the successful candidate is ultimately found to labour was not known to all or any of the voters who cast their votes for him, a second election must be ordered and the candidate who stood next in rank cannot be declared elected. Hobbs v. Morey, (1904) 1 K. ELECTION—Secrecy of ballot.

—Secrecy of ballot.

———In an election two members by previous arrangement with a candidate used blue pencils to assure him that they had voted for him and election was sought to be cancelled on the ground that the secrecy of the ballot was violated,

Held: that unless it could be proved that the use of blue pencils indicated the persons who used them, the election would not be rendered invalid: 10 C. P. 733; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 614 and A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 766, Foll. (Pandalai, J.). RAJABHADUR MUDALIAR v. VISWANATHA REDDIAR.

———Rules regarding.

The name of the candidate for whom the vote was not cast being struck out on the voting papers does not invalidate the vote. The appearance of a tracing of some letters under the cross-mark made on the voting paper against the name of one of the candidates does not invalidate the vote unless the marks are such that the voter may be identified from them. Where the cross-mark is bisected by the line between the names of the candidates no clear intention of the vote having been cast in favour of one candidate or the other can be gathered; and that vote should be excluded from the votes counted. The presence of writing other than the cross-mark would invalidate the vote only if it should be found that the writing is a mark by which the voter may be afterwards identified. [Woodward v. Sarsons, 10 C. P. 733, Rel. on.] It must be either a mark which on the face of it shows or may show the person who has voted or with regard to which there is evidence on the record which shows that the mark was put in there by some prearrangement or conspiracy by reason whereof by looking at the mark one will be in a position to say that it is the vote of such and such a person. In other cases also if the intention that the voter should be identified could be gathered from the mere appearance of the writing the vote will be rejected. (Srinivasa Ayyangar, J.). P. C. —Vote.

———Significance.

The giving of a vote does not necessarily involve the exercise of judgment at all, it involves merely the expression or intimation of a wish or choice. That wish or choice may indeed be actuated by judgment; but it may also be actuated by mere whim or caprice. The method by which the wish or choice is arrived at is wholly immaterial, so long as the person upon whom the duty of giving the vote is cast expresses or intimates his wish or choice, however arrived at. ELECTIONS OFFENCES AND INQUIRIES ACT (39 of 1920).

—S. 11—Powers of Court.

———Election set aside—No order as to costs—Court cannot award.

In an election petition case an application was made before a Small Cause Court to execute the recommendation as to costs awarded by the Commissioners. At the time of the application the Governor had ordered the election to be set aside but had passed no order on the recommendation as to costs, though subsequently costs were ordered.

Held, that the Small Cause Court was bound to confine itself strictly to the order of the Governor as being the only instrument that justified execution being taken out. As the order of the Governor awarding costs did not exist at the time the application was made, the Court had no option but to dismiss the application. (Das and Doyle, JJ.). U. MAUNG GYEE v. U. ELECTION RULES—R. I.

—Interpretation.

———Having jurisdiction.

Certain acts complained of relating to an election, i.e., that votes given for the petitioner at the election were wrongly rejected by the President of Taluk Board as invalid and that the President refused to recount the votes when requested to do so, took place at a place P. A petition attacking the validity of the election was presented to the Subordinate Judge at C, who had jurisdiction over the place where the candidates were nominated but not over the place where the alleged irregularities happened. According to Rule 1 of the Rules for the Conduct of Inquiries and Decision of Disputes relating to Elections the petition should be presented to the District or Subordinate Judge "having jurisdiction".

Held, that the expression "having jurisdiction" can only mean having jurisdiction over the place of the acts or omissions complained of. (Reilly, J.). KUTTY v. VYDIARAKATH KUNHALI HAJI.

—S. 14—Costs of removal.

———The defendants were a corporation who had obtained a license under the Indian Electricity Act, (Act 9 of 1910) and as licensees under the Act had put up an aerial line, etc., on a certain street within the Municipal District of the Municipality of Karachi, the plaintiffs. The Municipality having arranged with the North Western Railway Co., that the latter should effect an overbridge, the aerial line and poles had to be shifted from their position. A part of the electric apparatus namely the seals of the out-out were not in good order and condition.

EQUITY—Benefit and repudiation.

As a result of this defect there had been a leakage of energy,

Held, such a state of things must certainly be deemed to be "likely to affect injuriously the use of energy by the licensee or by other persons," and accordingly the electric company were entitled upon discovering this condition of things, to discontinue the electric supply.

Where a main fuse was burnt out, in other words, where the cut-out became defective, ———Nature of evidence—Mode of proof—Distinction.

Neither an omission by an advocate to object to the giving of irrelevant and inadmissible evidence, nor the failure of the tribunal to exclude it of its own motion will validate a decree based on material which the Evidence Act declares to be inherently and in substance irrelevant to the issue. Partition papers are not of real assistance in the absence of detailed information as to the history of the document mentioned, when it was prepared, by whom, in whose presence, and for what purpose.

The question whether a document is admissible in evidence as a public document is fundamentally distinct from the question whether its contents are binding upon tenants without proof of notice on them or of their consent. Weight will obviously have to be attached to the statutory provisions for the partition of estates in operation at that time; and how far the proceedings did in fact conform to these rules is plainly a relevant matter. ———Based on certain fact not leading to one conclusion—Judge can draw legitimate inferences from facts proved—When particular inference cannot be reasonably drawn from facts partly relying on it for discharging onus of proof fails—Evidence—Burden of proof.

Where the Court has to depend upon probabilities based on certain facts which do not lead to one conclusion, the Judge is entitled to draw inferences from the facts proved before him, but the inferences must be such as could be legitimately drawn from the facts. If the facts are such that no reasonable man could draw a particular inference is such as to be equally consistent with non-liability and with liability, then the party who relies on the inference to discharge the onus of proof of establishing liability fails. Smith, Ltd. v. *G. —Appreciation of—Proof.

———Positive and negative.

An affirmative proposition is not established by showing that the witnesses who depose to a contradictory negative proposition are not roliable. ———Contradictory evidence—Credibility—Finding of trial Court.

It is doubtless true that on appeal the whole case, including the facts, are within the jurisdiction of the appeal Court. But, genearally speaking it is undesirable to interfere with the findings of fact of the trial Judge who sees and hears the witnesses, and has an opportunity of noting their demeanour, especially in cases where the issue is simple and depends on the credit which attached to one or other of conflicting witnesses.

When the appellate Court finds witnesses for plaintiff deposing to facts absolutely contrary to the facts to which the witnesses for defendant depose; when witnesses on one side are prima facie as deserving of credit as the witnesses on the other side; when the witnesses on neither side have been shaken in cross-examination and when trial Court has applied its mind intelligently as to the witnesses whom it should believe and the witnesses whom it should not believe, the finding of the trial Court as to the credibility of the witnesses should be accepted. —Credibility.

———Oral evidence—Documentary evidence.

The trial Judge did not deal with the genuineness of the entries in the books of Pandas upon any reasoned footing. He had no evidence before him directly bearing upon the topic of genuineness, except such as may have been afforded by the comparison of certain signatures. He pronounced the entries forgeries because they were inconsistent with the evidence of one B, whom he believed in all. For the same reason he declared that one other document was a forgery, although apparently he had not before him the original or any satisfactory evidence of the circumstances in which it was alleged to have been made. The High Court, however, approached the matter from a different angle. The Judges thought it proper to make a critical examination of the actual books and of the evidence, if any, supporting or impeaching the genuineness of the entries, and after the most rigid scrutiny of these books, came to the conclusion that the entries were undoubtedly genuine. They also weighed the oral evidence directed to the rest of the case, and having seen M, the principal witness, rejected the evidence. At all times considerable weight should be attached to the opinion of the Judge who heard the witnesses as to their relative credibility. ———Loss of document—Absence of plea—Relevant evidence.

A document which was relied on was mentioned in the plaint. The document was lost and the fact that it was lost was mentioned in an oral pleading made while evidence was being given and leave was asked to prove it by secondary evidence. This was refused on the ground that no plea of loss of document was raised in the earliest stage. The document was found subsequently and was tendered in the lower Appellate Court, and that Court was of opinion that the refusal to admit secondary evidence was correct because no plea about the loss of the original document was made and he refused to accept the document itself for the same reason,

Held, it is the duty of a Court to get hold of all the relevant evidence there may be and to examine it, giving of course due weight to any circumstances attending its production that might render it less or more credible, and giving the other party a fair opportunity of meeting it, and no Court has the right to reject evidence tendered at any stage of the trial before its close unless it is irrelevant. ———Relevant evidence.

It is the duty of the Court to welcome any evidence that may be offered and indeed to search for it, and it is wrong to exclude any evidence that is relevant. If it is tendered late, such suspicion or disbelief of it as may be due to that fact will attach to it automatically, and if the other party has had no opportunity, because of the lateness of production of rebutting evidence he might have had, the disbelief is greatly increased. ———Admissibility—Summary decision—Doubtful cases—Procedure.

Matters tendered in evidence by the prosecution affecting case, must be dealt with summarily and instantly by the Judge at the trial when they are tendered. Judges in a Court of appeal, are apt sometimes to attach weight to the opinion of the assessors, and although their opinion does not have any legal effect, the Judge ought to guard very carefully against allowing a discussion in Court, of the reading of a document in Court, in the presence of the assessors injurious to the accused, when it is by law inadmissible. The benefit of a reasonable doubt ought to be given from the Bench, even to the admission of evidence particularly documentary evidence, during the trial, and when the Judge is unable to make up his mind about admissibility, the proper course for him is, either to direct the prosecution to keep back the documets until he has an opportunity of looking into the law, or to reject them altogether. No Judge in a doubtful case of admissibility ought to allow the evidence first to be given, and then in his judgment give a decision about their admissibility. Doubtful or inadmissible documents ought not to be admitted in criminal trials. (Walsh and Sulaiman, JJ.). LAICAM SINGH v. EMPEROR. 86 I.C. 817=26 Cr. L.J. 881=6 L.R.A. Medical evidence in cases of age of a party to a suit which falls to be decided for purposes of limitation cannot throw much light because from its very nature it is based on conjectures only and it cannot possibly be looked upon for the purposes of determining with precision the exact age of a particular person. In cases when limitation is pleaded in defence, a difference of even a single day settles the fate of the case one way or the other, and no doctor, however conscientious and competent he may be, can give the precise age of a person so as to enable the Court to determine the exact date of that person's birth. ———Common ancestor—Settlement record.

A certain common ancestor of the parties in the pedigree table recorded at the time of settlement indicates that the land in dispute was occupied by him. —Presumption.

——Possession—Record-of-rights.

The presumption of correctness, which attaches to the finally published Record-of- Rights, relates only to possession at the time when the record is prepared: and, even if such presumption can be made in a criminal trial, it is clear that where there has been an interval of 10 or 12 years between the preparation of the record and the occurrence of an offence in respect of dispute arising over possession of land, any presumption arising from the record is obviously of the weakest possible description. Indeed the probative value is practically nil since all sorts of changes may obviously take place in the course of 10 or 12 years. (Graham and Lort-Williams, JJ.). ———Plaintiff who had a certificate entitling him to collect the debts due to the estate of the deceased aunt claimed from the defendant (another nephew of the aunt) a sum of rupees 10,000, which the defendant deposited under a deposit note with the National Bank of India at Mandalay. The issue in effect was whether the money which the defendant deposited in the Bank was his own money or his aunt's. The plaintiff said and he gave explicit evidence to the effect that, on the instructions of his aunt, shortly before she died he took out the money in his hands which belonged to her, Rs. 10,000, and handed to the defendant, and that is the money which had been deposited in the bank and has not been repaid. The defendant said that he had considerable funds of his own and that Rs. 10,000 was his, which he deposited in the bank of his own account. Evidence produced by both the parties was open to criticism. The trial Judge, who gave careful attention to the evidence, found in favour of the plaintiff's story. The High Court did not believe the story of either side but reversed the decree of the trial Court, Held, that the trial Judge accepted plaintiff's story, and once plaintiff's story was accepted defendant's evidence was not sufficient answer to plaintiff's case and the original judgment of the trial Court should not be disturbed. In a suit for dower on the basis of an agreement fixing the amount of the dower, evidence regarding social position of the parties and customary dower is not material except as affording some test of the credibility of the witnesses of the party alleging the agreement. In the case of an agreement entered into 37 years back, the oral evidence of the agreement must be clear and convincing in order to establish a claim against the estate of the man who is said to have been a party to it. (Lord Salvesen.) MT. HAFIZAN v. MT. SUBA BIBI. 76 I.C. 948= 37 C.L.J. 461=27 C. W.N. 864=18 M.L. W. 670= 4 L.R.P.C. 95=A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 29= 44 M.L.J. 714 (P.C.).

———Bearing of onus.

The weight to be attached to the evidence of a party is not governed by any such external consideration as that of the burden of proof but depends entirely on the intrinsic evidence. (Kotval, A.J.C.). GOWARDHAN DAS v. R. S. HARLAL RAMSUKH. 69 I.C. 541=A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 62.

———Secondary and inferior evidence.

It is quite unsafe to accept the evidence more or less secondary in its character and certainly of inferior quality to the evidence which would have been produced but has been withheld. Where therefore most of the facts deposed to by the witness of one party are matters of which the opposite party would have in the natural course of circumstances of any particular case, direct knowledge, it is an act of impertinence on the part of the latter party to ask the Court to disbelieve the evidence led by the former party, when he himself is not prepared to take the responsibility of an oath and give to the Court his own version of the facts. (Dalal and Wazir Hasan, A. J. Cs.). MT. CHAURAS KUAR v. MT. ABHAIRAJ KUAR. 65 I.C. 380= 8 O. L. J. 681=A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 59.

———Probability against positive evidence.

The Court may allow its decision to be affected by considerations of probabilities, even though there may be positive testimony to the contrary effect. (Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ.). SURENDRA KRISHNA v. RANEE DASSEE. 59 I. C. 814= 33 C.L.J. 34=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 677.

———Delayed information.

When a witness admits that he disclosed his knowledge of a crime to the police at a very late date and gives no explanation of this delay, his evidence is of no value. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Le Rossignol, J.). KHERI v. THE CROWN. 99 I. C. 857=3 L. L.J. 147=28 Cr. L. J. 185.

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872).

—Presumption about death.

———Religious endowment — Property vested in mahant—Alienation by mahant—Suit by successor against alienee—Limitation.

Where the property is vested in the juridical person, and the Mahant is only the representative and manager of the idol, the act of alienation is a direct challenge upon the title of the idol, and the idol or the manager of the idol on behalf of the idol must bring the suit within 12 years from the date of the alienation. But where the title is in the Mahant or the Shebait the act of alienation is not a challenge upon the title of the idol, though the property may be endowed property in the sense that its income has to be appropriated to the purposes of the endowment; and there is no adverse possession so long as the person making the alienation is alive and the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiffs only when a new title has come into existence capable of maintaining the suit and which has not approved of or acquiesced in the alienation. Where there can be no doubt whatever that though the property is endowed property in the sense that its income has to be appropriated to the purposes of the endowment, still the title is in the successive Mahants, time is to run from the date of the death of alienor who alienated the properties in dispute. If the alienor has not been heard of for 7 years by those who would naturally have heard of him, if he had been alive, it can be presumed that he is dead. The suits are not barred as the time begins to run from the date of the presumption. Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das,

EVIDENCE ACT (1872)—Scope.

37 Cal. 885, Ref.; Vidya Varuthi v. Balusami, 44 Mad. 831, Foll. (Das and Bucknill, JJ.). MAHANTH RAMRUPGIR v. LAL CHAND MARWARI.
67 I. C. 401=3 Pat. L.T. 352=1 Pat. 475=A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 243.

—Scope.

———The intention of the Legislature in using the words "in civil proceedings" in S. 196 (7) was to make the statement admissible against the person examined unconditionally so far as civil proceedings are concerned and in criminal proceedings subject to the provisions of S. 132, Evidence Act. S. 196, Companies Act was not intended in any way to override the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. (Jai Lal, J.). RAMCHAND GURWALA v. KING-EMPEROR. 98 I.C. 599=27 Cr. L.J. 1383=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 385.

———Applicability of Cr. P. Code.

The Evidence Act is a separate statute dealing with an important branch of law, and its provisions are independent of the rules of procedure contained in the Criminal Procedure Code and must have full scope unless it is clearly proved that they have been repealed or altered by another statute. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Addison, J.). RANNUN v. KING-EMPEROR. 94 I.C. 901=7 Lah. 84=27 Cr. L.J. 709=27 P.L.R. 583=A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 88.

———Applicability of Oaths Act.

The provisions of the Oaths Act are not intended to be utilized in such a manner as would abrogate the provisions of the Evidence Act. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). SK. JAMU v. MAHOMED IBRAHIM. 90 I.C. 378=A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 194.

—S. 3—"Evidence."

———Meaning of

Per Macnair, A. J. C.—The word "evidence" in the Act signifies only the instruments by means of which relevant facts are brought before the Court, viz., witnesses and documents, and by means of which the Court is convinced of these facts. (Findlay, J. C., Macnair and Subhedar, A. J. Cs.). GOBARYA v. EMPEROR.

A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 242 (F.B.).

———"Matters before it"—Meaning of.

Every Court is bound to base its decision not merely on "evidence" but on "matters before it." The expression "matters before it" in S. 3 of the Evidence Act includes matters which do not fall within the definition of "evidence" as given in that section. Therefore in determining what is evidence other than "evidence" in the phraseology of the Act, the definition of "evidence" must be read with that of "proved" given in the said section. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). BHAIRONPRASAD v. MAHANT LAXMI NARAYANDAS.

79 I.C. 609=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 385.

—S. 3—"Proved."

———Degree of proof.

Where a reversioner is suing persons who are merely trespassers no strong proof is required of the death of a nearer reversioner. A prudent man might within the meaning of the definition of "proved" in S. 3, Evidence Act, consider the death of the nearer reversioner sufficiently probable on very little evidence. (Ashworth, J.). BADAL v. SARASWATI. 103 I.C. 329=A.I.R. 1927 All. 687.

———Meaning of.

When, after considering all the matters before it, if a Court believes a certain thing exists it cannot say that the thing is not proved. (Hallifax and Kotval, A.J. Cs.). MANGAL GAUDA v. EMPEROR. 81 I.C. 901=25 Cr. L.J. 1077=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 37.

———"Not proved", "disproved" and "reasonable doubt"—Meaning of.

The word "proved" means that it is so probable that a fact is established that a person should as a reasonable man act upon it. The law does not require that facts should be proved with anything like mathematical certainty. The word "disproved" is merely the converse of the previous proposition. The expression "not to be proved" indicates a state of mind between the two states of mind, when it is not possible to say precisely how the matter stands. "Reasonable doubt" is the doubt which reasonable men may reasonably entertain and not the doubt of a weak or vacillating mind. (Crump, J.). EMPEROR v. SHAFI AHMAD.

31 Bom. L.R. 515.

—S. 4—Presumption—Possession.

Per Dawson Miller, C. J.—Possession, however, is not necessarily the same thing as user and if the land is of such a nature as to render it unfit for actual enjoyment in the usual modes it may properly be presumed that the previous possession of the plaintiff continued until the contrary is proved. This presumption is a presumption of fact. It is by no means conclusive and whether it should be applied or not must depend upon the facts of each particular case. 9 Cal. 744 (F. B.), Rel. on.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 5—Depositions.

Per Mullick, J.—In every case the Court may draw a presumption as to possession from title. It is a presumption of fact which the Evidence Act expressly warrants by S. 114. Section 4 of that Act enacts that the Court may regard the fact as proved unless and until it is disproved or may call for proof of it. The discretion of the Court is to be exercised with due regard to the nature of the land and the evidence in the case. 1 P. L. J. 146, Expl. (Dawson-Miller, C. J. and Mullick, J.). —S. 4—Presumption—Powers of Court.

———Public purposes—Declaration in acquisition.

The fact that the declaration may be conclusive as to the land being needed for a public purpose does not in any way debar the Court from enquiring into the validity of the steps which led up to that declaration. —S. 5—Conduct of a party.

———In a suit against the son of a lambardar for profits, the evidence brought to prove that there was difficulty in the collection of the rent and to prove that on the death of the lambardar no one could be induced to take his place is relevant and admissible. ———Cr. P. Code, S. 360—Non-compliance with S. 360 does not make record entirely inadmissible in evidence—Evidence Act, Ss. 5 and 80—Evidence Act, S. 91.

The provisions of S. 360 are mandatory. But non-compliance does not legally result in the total inadmissibility of the record of evidence and in the absence of any definite provision of law entailing inadmissibility, each case of non-compliance must be considered by the Court on its own merits and the document which purports to be the record can be admitted, but without the presumption laid down in S. 80 of the Evidence Act, and, therefore, open to question by the defence and appraisal by the Court.

The law itself does not expressly lay down that the least failure to comply with the provisions of Section 360 renders the whole document inadmissible. Where therefore there has been an attempt by the presiding officer to comply with its provisions and to secure the accuracy of the record of evidence the provisions of S. 80 do not lead to complete exclusion of the document, and the Court is bound to admit under S. 5 but it is open to each side to adduce evidence as to its faithfulness or otherwise and as to the degree of presumption under S. 80 and the weight to be attached to it. 46 Cal. 895, Foll. (Madgavkar, A.J.C.). —S. 5—Irrelevant evidence.

———Omission to object—Duty of Court.

The mere omission to object to a document which is not in itself admissible as evidence does not constitute that document evidence so as to be available to either party at the trial. It is clearly the duty of the Judge, apart altogether from any objection by the parties or their pleaders, to exclude irrelevant evidence. (Dawson-Miller, C. J. and Mullick, J.). ———In the trial for the murder of a particular person the case against the accused under trial, should be determined on evidence which is relevant and admissible under the Act and on the strength of evidence which the Court may consider necessary to record and appreciate with reference to two entirely diff erent murders committed by the accused. It is not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue. Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales, (1894) A. C. 57, Foll.

Evidence of defalcations both prior or subsequent whether such defalcations formed the basis of another charge on which the accused may have been acquitted or not are admissible in evidence to prove guilty intent as also to anticipate the defence of the non-existence of such intent. Motive for a crime, while it is always a satisfactory circumstance of corroboration when there is convincing evidence to prove the guilt of an accused person, can never supply the want of reliable evidence, direct or circumstantial, of the commission of the crime with which he is charged. ———What is.

In a trial for the murder of a particular person, the prosecution should not show, that on two previous occasions the accused under trial had committed murders but had falsely charged and got convicted some others as murderers. The fact that the previous murders have been committed by the accused does not constitute a motive or preparation under S. 8.

Per Crump, J.—A motive is that which moves a man to do a particular act. ———Independent evidence.

In order to rely on the evidence of persons who identified the accused in jail but failed to do so in Court, the fact of the jail identification must be stated in the witness's evidence. An identification in jail is in essence a statement by the witness, "I saw this man who is now before me taking part in the offence". That statement can be used to corroborate his evidence given in Court. If the witness says in his evidence: "A number of persons were shown to me at the jail and from among them I pointed out those persons whom I had seen taking part in the offence", it is permissible under S. 9 to call independent evidence, such as that of the Magistrate who conducted the identification, to prove the identity of the persons whom the witness picked out at the jail, even though the witness himself may not correctly remember who they were. ———Cipher Code—Inference.

The object of S. 10 is merely to ensure that one person shall not be made responsible for the acts or deeds of another until some bond in the nature of agency has been established between them and the acts, words, or writing of another which it is proposed to attribute vicariously to the person charged must be in furtherance of the common design and after such design was entertained.

In a trial of several accused for sedition an exercise book containing a Cipher Code was put in evidence,

Held, that the Cipher Code book was not to be treated as 'the act, word or deed of a particular individual, but the fact that it existed the fact that it set forth the names and addresses of a substantial number of persons charged the fact that it was in a peculiar form such as is not likely to be found in any Code intended to be used for lawful purposes, and many internal indications such as grouping of the names and the use of words and names having a revolutionary significance all gave rise to a probability, amounting almost to certainty that the persons named in the Code were associated for some unlawful purposes whose interests demanded that it should be kept secret and in absence of evidence that the persons named in it were associated for some legitimate purposes to be kept secret for some legitimate reason, the Cipher Code was in itself a good ground for supposing that the persons named had conspired to commit an offence and any other acts or writings of individual conspirators in furtherance of the common design became admissible under S. 10. Section 10 of the Evidence Act means this : if two persons conspire together to commit an offence, each is regarded as being the agent of another and just as the principal is liable for the acts of the agent, so each conspirator is liable for what is done by his fellow conspirator in furtherance of the common intention which they had both entertained. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 11—Legitimacy of children.

———Admissibility—Case under S. 401, I. P. C.

When offence charged against an accused is that of belonging to a gang of thieves, a former judgment more than 25 years old and convicting him of dacoity is admissible in evidence, though the former judgment is useful only for the purpose of proving that the accused is a person of criminal tendencies to commit theft who may be a member of the alleged gang. The judgment by no means goes to show that he had any habit of committing theft in the period under consideration. 14 Bom. L.R. 373 and 38 Cal. 408, Foll. (Marten and Fawcett, JJ.). —S. 11—Hindu Muslim riot.

———Previous attempt to convert—Admissibility of.

When the charges against the accused are of dacoity and rioting, evidence that on the day after the occurence, the accused who was a Mussalman wanted another, a Hindu, to embrace Islam and threatened to beat him if he did not, is wholly irrelevant to either of the charges and should not be admitted notwithstanding that the riots in which accused was involved were due to Hindu-Muslim dissensions. —S. 11—Law on migration.

———Proof of adoption.

Where the question is whether a migrating family has adopted the law of the new place, the fact that in the allied or connected families, the new law has very widely been adopted and the rites and ceremonies of the new place have been generally recognised, renders it probable within the meaning of S. 11 that the family in question has adopted the new law.

Where the fact in issue is whether the migrating family has adopted the law of the new place a previous judgment, in which the ancestors of the family in question were on one side, is relevant. The observance of rites and ceremonies at marriages, deaths and births are also relevant. (Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ.). SARADA PARSANNA ROY v. UMA KANTA. 77 I.C. 450=37 C. L. —S. 11—Legitimacy of children.

———Previous case—Absence of cross-examination on illegitimacy—Admissibility.

Where the question is whether a particular person is the illegitimate son of a certain man and a certain woman, the fact on a previous occasion, when giving evidence on behalf of the woman the man was asked questions in cross-examination in order to show his partiality to her, including the question whether she had been his wife before another man took her in marriage, but that no question was asked him as to her bearing him illegitimate children, is admissible in evidence under S. 11 (2) as it makes highly improbable the allegation that the illegitimacy was well-known. The word "claim" denotes a demand or assertion in relation to a thing or attribute as against or from some person or persons, showing the existence of a right to it in the claimant. A bare statement may or may not be a claim according to the attending circumstances in which it is made. It may amount to a claim or be a mere statement of claim, though in some circumstances a statement may amount to a claim.

Judgments inter partes can be admitted in order to prove the conduct of the parties or to show particular instances of the exercise of rights, or admissions made by parties' ancestors or how the property was dealt with previously as relevant evidence under the provisions of S. 11 or S. 13. They cannot be wholly excluded from consideration because in so far as they explain the nature of possession or throw light on the motives or conduct of parties or reproduce the admissions made by the parties or their ancestors and also embody an authoritative statement of the facts which the investigation then held before the Court brought to light, such judgments have very high evidentiary value and may even shift the burden of proof. 22 W.R. 365; 24 Bom. 591 and A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 109, Ref. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). ———Evidence of collateral facts—Principles explained.

It is settled law that under neither of Ss. 14 and 15 can the evidence on facts similar to but not part of the same transaction as the main fact be received for the purpose of proving the occurrence of the main fact, which must be established by evidence directly bearing on it. But when the existence of that fact has been so established and a question arises as to the state of mind of the person who did it, or whether the act in question was done accidentally or with a particular knowledge or intention, evidence of similar acts may, under certain conditions, be admitted. Section 14 is wholly inapplicable to a case where the state of mind or feeling of the accused is not a fact in issue or a relevant fact, and the guilt or innocence depends on proof of actual facts. 6 Cal. 655; 42 Cal. 957; 47 Cal. 671 (F.B.); 12 P.R. 1913 Cr. and Reg v. Richardson, 8 Cox. 448, Rel. on.

In the case of actual dacoity the prosecution is bound to prove the accused's commission of all the acts which constitute the offence. Section 15 of the Evidence Act admits the production of any evidence which would determine the construction to be placed upon acts which in themselves might or might not be the preparation for dacoity and evidence that one or more members of the gang had been concerned in previous and similar offences committed at the same place is admissible in evidence for the purpose. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 17—Admission of marriage.

Court admitting ownership of plaintiff-respondent over disputed land for a special purpose to shorten proceedings and to avoid further litigation, it cannot be held to be binding in the face of the finding by the High Court in second appeal that the agreement containing the admission was not an agreement within the meaning of O. 23, R. 3 and did not adjust the suit either wholly or in part. The statement was at the most an admission which could constitute a fresh piece of evidence coming up for consideration for the first time in the appellate Court in which case it must be shown that it was formerly produced and admitted under O. 41, R. 27. The effect of an acknowledgment of paternity validly made as establishing marriage between the parents of the acknowledgee may be a matter of substantive Mahomedan Law; but the effect of an admission of marriage, as proof of such marriage, is a question merely of adjective law governed by the Indian Evidence Act. Its probative value must necessarily depend on the surrounding circumstances. (Rupchand Bilaram and Lobo, A.J.Cs.). MT. HAKIMA v. MT. JIANDI. 103 I.C. 870=A.I.R. 1927 Sind 209.

Applications for mutation of names by two different agents of the plaintiff, in each of which he is stated to be six years old at the time, cannot be called admissions by persons auhorised to make them as the agents had no authority to make any statement in regard to the plaintiff's age beyond that he was still a minor. Similar is the case of the casual statemants that the plaintiff was then seven years old made in the Mukhtiarnama executed on his behalf by plaintiff's guardian. —S. 23—Admission in compromise.

———S. 23 is no bar to use of admissions in compromise which is not rejected.

The parties to a suit agreed to compromise it and executed a statement to that effect. A petition was presented stating that the case had been compromised with a prayer for decree. But it was signed by one defendant only; the other defendants disagreeing with its terms. Thereupon Court framed an issue to ascertain whether the compromise was binding on all the parties. Against the order of the Court framing an issue and directing that enquiry to be made, the plaintiff filed an appeal which was dismissed, the Court holding the inquiry. As a result of the inquiry by Trial Court, it was held that the compromise was not binding on all the defendants and the suit was dismissed. On appeal, the District Judge held that as the compromise had been rejected and held not binding, and the appeal from the order was also dismissed, the admissions in the agreement could not be used as evidence as S. 23 acted as bar.

Held, that the agreement between the parties to compromise had been reduced to writing and had been filed in Court. It was wrong to say that the compromise was rejected and held not binding and that an appeal from that order was dismissed. The appeal was against the decision of the Trial Court to make an inquiry against the binding nature of the compromise. Therefore, there had been no final adjudication by the District Judge that the compromise was not binding. It was necessary for the District Judge to decide whether the compromise propounded by the plaintiff was binding on the defendants and S. 23 did not present any bar to the proof of the compromise, if it was made as alleged by the plaintiff. The accused made a confession in which he implicated three persons in an offence of murder. At the trial of the three persons the accused was granted a conditional pardon and examined as a witness for the prosecution. The three persons were acquitted and the accused was tried for the offence of murder,

Held, the confession made by the accused in the first murder trial was inadmissible in evidence against him under S. 24 of the Evidence Act. The statements made by the accused in the first murder trial as a witness under a tender of pardon are admissible for they were removed from the operation of S. 24 by virtue of S. 339, Cl. (2) of the Cr. P. Code. The statements made by the accused in the trial of the Police officer concerned in the investigation of the case could be admitted in evidence against him on his own trial for murder. When the admissibility of a confession depends upon a conclusion as to the truth about conflicting evidence antecedent to the making of the confession and tending to show that it is liable to rejection under S. 24, the trial Judge must make up his mind upon this issue, and decide the question of admissibility before relying upon the contents of the confession. ———Three-fold function.

In scrutinising a case from the point of view of S. 24, the Court will have to perform a three-fold function. It will have, as a Court, to determine the sufficiency of the inducement, threat, or promise as affording certain grounds; it will have again to clothe itself with the mentality of the accused to see whether the grounds would appear to the accused reasonable for a supposition that is mentioned in the section; lastly, it will have to judge, as a Court, if the confession appears to have been caused in consequence of the inducement, threat or promise: [52 Cal. 67, Rel.]. ———Person making confession may be convicted when Court thinks that it is voluntary and true.

There is nothing in law to prevent a Court from convicting a person upon a confession which has been subsequently retracted, provided that the Court is convinced that the statement is voluntary and true. If there be anything from the barest suspicion to positive evidence that the confession has been obtained by threat, persuasion, etc., such confession has of course to be discarded. But where a confession is made by a person who is sui juris before a Magistrate in an atmosphere untainted by the influence of the police or by any other influence and there are no suspicious features about it there is no reason why the statement should not be accepted. A retracted confession may be used as evidence, not only against the person making it, but as against persons tried jointly with the confessing accused for the same offence. As against the person making it, a retracted confession may form the basis of a conviction, even without any corroborative evidence. From the point of view of legality alone the fact that a confession has been retracted is immaterial. The weight to be given to such confessions both as against the person making it and the persons being tried jointly with him is another question and must depend on the circumstances of each case. In deciding whether a retracted confession is to be admitted in evidence, it is doubtless necessary to examine, not only the statement made by the prisoner as to how he came to make the confession, but all the circumstances of the case. There is no statutory bar to a conviction on such evidence, but a confession must not be regarded in the same light as an admission in a civil Court.

The weight to be given to a retracted confession must depend upon the circumstances under which the confession was originally made and the circumstances under which it was attracted, including the reasons given by the prisoner for its retraction. The accused was appointed approver in a case of murder. He made several confessional statements implicating himself and the other accused in the murder. But at the Sessions trial he unreservedly retracted his previous statements as approver and that he knew nothing of the murder and that he was tutored by the police into making those statements which were false. The conditional pardon granted to him was withdrawn and he was put on his trial on the previous charge of murder. There was no evidence to corroborate his confession and further the various confessional statements made by him were wanting in those natural details which one would ordinarily expect in a free and voluntary confession. It is unsafe for a Court to rely on and act on a confession which has been retracted unless, after a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case, the Court is in a position to come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true, that is to say, usually unless the confession is corroborated by credible independent evidence. ———Voluntary nature is test of admissibility—Factors to determine—Mentality of accused—Sufficiency of inducement and its relation with confession as cause and effect—Proof of inducement is not necessary.

The test of admissibility of a confession is its voluntary nature and not its falsity or truth. To determine the voluntary nature or otherwise of a confession, the mentality of the accused is to be judged rather than that of the person in authority. Not merely actual words but words accompanied by acts or conduct as well on the part of the person in authority which may beconstrued by the accused person, situated as he then is, as amounting to an inducement, threat or promise, will have to be taken into account. A perfectly innocent expression, coupled with acts or conduct on the part of the person in authority, together with the surrounding circumstances may amount to inducement threat or promise. In scrutinising a case from the point of view of S. 24 of the Evidence Act the Court will have to perform a three-fold function, (1) to determine the sufficiency of the inducement, threat or promise, (2) the mentality of the accused, and (3) whether the confession appears to have been caused in consequence of the inducement, threat or promise. The section does not require positive proof (as defined in S. 3 of the Act) of improper inducement to justify the rejection of the confession, the word "appears" indicating a lesser degree of probability than would be necessary if "proof" had been required. ———Any statement by a person which would suggest an inference as to his guilt may be a confession within S. 24 of the Act. If it is found that a confession recorded under S. 164 of the Cr. P. C. was procured by a Police Officer by the offer of an inducement, it becomes inadmissible under S. 24 of the Evidence Act.

Per Shah, J.—S. 24 will apply even if the person confessing was not a accused person at the time of confession. It is sufficient if he ultimately comes to be the accused person with reference to the charge in respect of which he is said to have confessed. Though a statement of an approver may be given in evidence against him under S. 339 (2) of the Cr. P. C. it cannot be said that the operation of S. 24 is altogether excluded, if it is shown that some influence was proceeding from some authority, simultaneously with the legal tender of pardon, which would invite the application of S. 24 of the Evidence Act, then the confessional part of statement would be inadmissible by virtue of the section. ———Actual arrest and detention is not necessary.

There are found several cases in which police officers have, after detaining a person accused of an offence, put forward the plea that the latter was not in custody, because he had not yet been formally arrested. The object of this seems to be either to avoid the operation of S. 26 or to shorten the period of time between the arrest and the confession subsequently made to a Magistrate or to postpone the necessity for applying for a remand order. The idea of "free detention" is altogether mistaken and sometimes even hypocritical. It is an infringement of the spirit, while appearing to conform to the strict letter of the law. As soon as an accused or suspected person comes into the hands of a police officer he is in the absence of clear and unmistakable evidence to the contrary, no longer at liberty and is therefore in custody within the meaning of Ss. 26 and 27. ———Person is not in police 'custody' merely because he has been invited to explain certain circumstances, unless he has been arrested or is under police supervision.

The meaning of words "in custody of the Police" should not be extended by implication to cases beyond what is absolutely necessary, i.e., where the man is really under arrest or in strict supervision and is merely allowed to go out for a few moments. But where the case is not so and the accused is not arrested or under supervision, he merely being invited to explain certain circumstances, he should not be deemed to be in Police custody. It, however, by no means follows, that because the statement is admissible, therefore, it should not be considered with considerable care to see how far reliance should be placed on such extra-judicial confession. The weight to be given to it depends very much on the circumstances of the case, whether suspicion attached to the accused at the time, whether accused was intelligent or ignorant of the possible result of the confession, and the like. —S. 27—Interpretation.

———'Fact'.

The expression "fact" as defined in S. 3 includes not only the physical fact but also the psychological fact or mental condition of which any person is conscious. It is in the former sense that the word is used in S. 27. (Shadi Lal, C.J., Harrison, Fforde, Tek Chand, Jai Lal, Dalip Singh and Agha Haidar, JJ.). SUKHAN v. EMPEROR. 115 I.C. 6=10 Lah. 283=30 P.L.R. 197=11 L.L.J. 159=30 Cr.L.J. 414=12 A.I.Cr.R. 382=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 344 (F. B.).

———'Information.'

Fforde, J.—The word 'statement' is used interchangeably with the word 'information'. A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 338, Diss. from. (Shadi Lal, C.J., Harrison, Fforde, Tek Chand, Jai Lal, Dalip Singh and Agha Haidar, JJ.). SUKHAN v. EMPEROR. 115 I.C. 6=10 Lah. 283=30 P.L.R 197=11 L.L J. 159=30 Cr.L.J. 414=12 A.I. Cr.R. 382=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 344 (F.B.).

———'Information.'

The word "information" cannot be used as synonymous with the word "statement." The word "information" as distinct from the word "statement" connotes two things, namely, a statement or other means employed for imparting knowledge possessed by one person to another, and the knowledge so derived by the other person. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ.). KARAM DIN v. EMPEROR. 115 I.C. 1=30 Cr.L.J. 385=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 27—Scope.

———'Confession.'

In construing S. 27 the word "confession" does not necessarily mean a complete confession of guilt but means and includes any incriminating statement. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ.). KARAM DIN v. EMPEROR. 115 I.C. 1=30 Cr.L.J. 385=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338.

———'Discovered.'

Even more important is the word 'discovered'. It is used in a peculiar sense. The test is that the fact discovered must be discovered in the sense, that the proof of the existence of that fact no longer rests on the credibility of the accused's statement but rests on the credibility of the witnesses who depose to the existence of that fact. The rest of the information is not admissible. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ.). KARAM DIN v. EMPEROR. 115 I.C. 1=30 Cr.L.J. 385=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 338.

———'Distinctly.'

Under S. 27 the information to be proved must relate distinctly to the fact thereby discovered. The word 'distinctly' in S. 27 is used in some sense other than the word 'directly'. It is meant to exclude certain things and to limit and confine the information which may be proved within the definite limits and not necessarily to include everything which may relate to that information. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ.). KARAM DIN v. EMPEROR. 115 I. C. 1=30. Cr.L.J. 385=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 338.

———Section must be strictly construed.

S. 27 must be very strictly construed. Where one accused has agreed to point out a place where a fact would be discovered, in pursuance of his statement to point out that place, the section does not cover similar statements of the other accused in police custody. (Prideaux, A.J.C.). KUDAON v. EMPEROR. 91 I.C. 236=21 N.L.R. 86=27 Cr. L.J. 60=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 407.

———'Custody.'

—S. 27—Scope.

———Out of statement containing confession only such portion as leads to discovery is admissible.

Per Graham, J.—Section 27 being a proviso to the preceding sections must be strictly construed and any relaxation must be sparingly allowed, care being exercised to see that the purpose and object of Ss. 25 and 26 are not rendered nugatory by any lax interpretation.

A statement made by an accused while in police custody which contains a confession of guilt and also supplies information in consequence of which a discovery is made is not admissible in its entirety under S. 27, but only so much of it is admissible as relates distinctly or immediately to the discovery.

Per Lort-Williams, J.—S. 27 is not a proviso to either S. 24 or S. 25. It follows that some restricted or limited meaning narrower than the natural meaning must be attached to the words in S. 27.

The practice in England now is and doubtless was at the time when the Evidence Act was passed to allow to be stated in evidence that in consequence of information received from the prisoner certain facts had been discovered, thus to the extent of fixing the prisoner with knowledge. To this extent evidence under S. 27 may be given. (Graham and Lort-Williams, JJ.). SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL v. BHAJOO MAJHI.

34 C.W.N. 106=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 291.

———The provisions of S. 27 must be construed as favourably to the accused as possible for it is a section which makes an exception against the accused contrary to the general sections, namely, 25 and 26, which are in his favour.

When the accused stated "I buried the shirt, which was my share of the stolen property, under the beri tree." The shirt was accordingly found under the tree.

Held, that the fact that the accused buried that shirt or the fact that it was his share of the stolen property was not "discovered" within S. 27. Both these statements rested purely on the credibility or otherwise of the accused's statements: the fact that it was his share of the stolen property did not relate distinctly to the fact discovered which was merely that a certain article was buried under a certain tree: these facts could not be proved and would not be admissible or relevant against the accused. What could be rendered admissible under S. 27 would be that which the Court would find necessary in order that the statement may be intelligible and the fact that this was the accused's share of the stolen property or that he buried it, would not necessarily be proved by the admission of the statement. ———Only that portion of information which is immediate and proximate cause of discovery of fact can be proved.

The legislature has prescribed two limitations in order to define the scope of the information provable against the accused : (1) The information must be such as has caused the discovery of the fact, and (2) the information must "relate distinctly" to the fact discovered. The requirements of both the conditions specified above must be satisfied before an incriminating statement can be received in evidence. Thus, only that portion of the information is provable which was the immediate or proximate cause of the discovery of the fact. Anything, which is not connected with the fact as its cause, or is connected with it, not as its immediate or direct cause, but as its remote cause, does not come within the ambit of the section and should be excluded.

A was being tried under S. 302, I. P. C., for having committed the murder of B who was proved to have suddenly disappeared from his house and whose dead body was recovered from a well two days later. At the time of his disappearance B was wearing certain ornaments, but these ornaments were not found on his body at the time of his recovery from the well. During the investigation A was alleged to have made a statement to the police in these terms: "I had removed the karas, had pushed the boy into the well, and had pledged the karas with Alla Din" and in consequence of the information so received the karas were recovered from Alla Din, which were identified as those worn by B at the time of his disappearance.

Held, (Per Full Bench) that the statement that the accused had pledged with Alla Din the karas subsequently recovered from the latter is admissible under S. 27 but that the rest of the incriminating statement cannot be received in evidence. ———The words used by the legislature in S. 27 make it absolutely clear that only so much of such information whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact which is deposed to as discovered in consequence of the information received, may be proved.

An accused gave information to the police in these words: "I shall produce the lathi with which I killed Ismail." It had been admitted as evidence under S. 27: The lathi which the accused handed over had no marks of blood whatsoever,

Held, that if the mere fact of the lathi having been handed to the police, might be relied upon, for the purpose of introducing an alleged confession made by the accused to the police, the provisions of S. 26 would become nugatory. which is under investigation. While only so much of the information can be proved as has led to the discovery of the fact, there is no legal justification for splitting up or cutting down the statement of the prisoner so as to make it a vague and unintelligible statement and thus to defeat the very object with which S. 27 was enacted and, therefore, the information must be proved in the precise terms in which it was given. ———Confession of accused can be considered against co-accused but cannot be taken as corroboration of accomplice witnesses.

The confession made by a person can be taken into consideration as against persons who are being tried along with him, such a statement however is always regarded as tainted and cannot be used to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice witnesses. Where the accused made his statement at the end of the prosecution case when the whole of the evidence had been freshly detailed in his presence, it can be rightly used as evidence against himself.

The evidence of one approver cannot be said to corroborate another except where both have, at the earliest opportunity and before there has been any chance of collaboration, deposed to the same acts as having been committed by particular accused person. As a matter of prudence unanimity as to the incident deposed to or a sufficient number of them by two approvers should have been insisted on before their uncorroborated testimony was deemed sufficient to warrant a conviction thereon. It is not necessary that the confession of an accused should receive direct corroboration as to the fact that the accused was concerned in the offence. ———Statement must inculpate the maker himself more than or at least equally with the co-accused.

The test to determine whether any statement by a co-accused amounts to a confession under S. 30 is to see whether his statement proposed to be used in evidence against another is sufficient by itself to justify his conviction for the offence for which he is jointly tried with the other person against whom it is tendered. The statement of one prisoner cannot be taken as evidence against another prisoner under S. 30 unless the parties are admittedly in pari delicto, that is, unless a confessing prisoner implicates himself to the full as much as his co-prisoner whom he is criminating. The ratio decidendi of the cases bearing on this point is that statements which inculpate the maker more than, or equally with, others, alone can afford any satisfactory guarantee of their truth. This necessarily means less weight must be attached to statements which implicate the maker in a lesser degree than others. Where the principal blame is laid on others the statement is self-serving according to the ideas of the person making it and is entirely excluded from consideration. There is absolutely no guarantee whatever as to its truth where the statement entirely exonerates the maker. Such a statement cannot be held admissible as against the co-accused. ———It is not safe to base conviction on the retracted uncorroborated confession of a co-accused and mere identification of an accused person by a confessing accused, who admittedly knew him, is absolutely no corroboration of the statement of the confessing accused. ———Per Full Bench.—Court has discretion to exclude a confession by an accused altogether from consideration against the co-accused if it is so disposed, Per Macnair, A.J.C.—The use of the word "may" does not show that every confession is of very small-value against a co-accused. It cannot be said that the word "may" gives the Court right to exclude the confession from consideration if it is so disposed. The Judge is given a discretion but the discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner; if the confession would help in arriving at a decision that the accused is guilty he must do so. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 30—Self-exculpatory confessions.

———"Same offence"—Meaning.

The expression "same offence" in S. 30 means the identical offence and does not mean an offence of the same kind. The legislature did not intend the section to cover different offences in the same transaction by different persons. The illustration to S. 30 makes the meaning of the section quite clear. (Cuming and Lort-Williams, JJ.). GOUR CHANDRA DAS v. EMPEROR. 115 I.C. 359=32 C.W.N. 1004=30 Cr.L.J. 475=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 14.

———'Affect'—Meaning.

The word "affect" is a very wide one and S. 30 is not limited to a case where the confessing accused directly implicates another accused as well as himself but also covers a case where the confession indirectly affects a co-accused. (Fawcett and Madgavkar, JJ.). EMPEROR v. SHIVABHAI BECHARBHAI. 97 I.C. 660=50 Bom. 683=28 Bom.L.R. 1013=27 Cr.L.J. 1140=A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 513.

———To use therefore a statement made in the dock by one accused against the other in a joint trial, offends against at least two of the fundamental principles of criminal law. What is contemplated by Section 30 is formal proof by the prosecution of a confession previously made. When you prove a confession made by a person, you tender evidence at the trial that on some previous occasion he did in fact make a confession, and that is the only thing which was ever contemplated by the section. ———Pedigree—Proof of.

Entries made by successive generations of bards supply a running account of the different branches of the families of their customers and they afford, if otherwise reliable, evidence of as great value as any family pedigree kept by the family members themselves.

A pedigree may be kept by a member of the family or by another person on his behalf and can be admitted in evidence if it is written by a family Bard for the purpose of keeping a record of the family events for his use and for the use of the family. At any rate such a record is a record of the statements as are usually made to and noted by the Bard; it can be admitted in evidence, though the person who made the entries is unknown. The Bahis of Gangabasi priests which contain the relationships of their clients and their ancestors are the records of statements made by persons having special means of knowledge and are admissible in evidence. 46 B. 753; 30 A. 510, Dist. (Kanhaiya Lal and Mukerjee, JJ.). EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 32—Dying declarations—Procedure of taking.

———Reliability depends upon circumstances in which declaration was made and nature of its record.

A dying declaration under the Indian Law assumes a character very widely different from what it is under the English Law. A dying declaration is relevant under the Indian Evidence Act, whether the person who made it was or was not at the time when it was made, under expectation of death, and the weight to be attached to it depends not upon the expectation of death which is a guarantee of its truth, but upon the circumstances and surroundings under which it was made and very much also upon the nature of the record that has been made of it. Hence it becomes almost always a question of fact as to whether it should be relied upon or not. (Greaves and Mukerjee, JJ.). —S. 32—Dying declarations—Partial acceptance.

———Acceptance of dying declaration in part and rejection of the rest is not permissible.

A dying declaration stands upon a widely different footing from the testimony of a witness given in Court. In the case of the latter it is permissible and at times necessary under certain circumstances to accept a part which is unimpeachable and reject that which is obviously untrue, though, to found a criminal conviction on such appraisement of evidence will be very often unsafe. As regards a dying declaration, to accept a portion and reject the rest is entirely out of the question; there must be absolute guarantee of the accuracy of the record and the truth of the entire statement before it can be acted upon. (Greaves and Mukerji, JJ.). EMPEROR v. PREMANANDA DUTT. 88 I.C. 1000=29 C.W.N. 738= 42 C.L.J. 247=52 Cal. 987=26 Cr. L. J. 1256= A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 876.

—S. 32 — Dying declarations — Procedure of taking.

———Form of dying declaration should show distinctly the questions put to the declarant and his answers to them.

Where a statement is not the ipsissima verba of the person making it but is composed of a mixture of questions and answers there are several objections open to its reception in evidence, which it is desirable should not be open in cases in which the person has no opportunity of cross-examination. In the first place the questions may be leading questions and in the condition of a person making a dying declaration there is always a very great danger of leading questions being answered without their force and effect being freely comprehended. In such circumstances the form of the declaration should be such that it would be possible to see what was the question and what was the answer, so as to discover how much was suggested by the examining Magistrate, and how much was the production of the person making the state ———"Family pedigree"—Construction.

The word " family pedigree " in Cl. 6 should not be construed according to the standard adopted by Courts of England in regard to pedigrees of English families. Peoples of India and peoples of England widely differ in their habits of thought, modes of expression and indeed in their entire system of family life.

Where a pedigree brings one down from the remotest ancestor to the generations living contemporaneously with a person in whose time it is prepared, the document is a record of family traditions as to pedigree and of the existence of persons contemporaneously alive. The authenticity of that part of the record which embraces the names of persons who existed before the living memory rests on the absence of anything showing directly or inferentially that the pedigree was prepared with any motive other than the natural motive of preparing and preserving a record of family traditions relating to the family pedigree. So far as a statement against the pecuniary or proprietary or other interest of the person making it is concerned, such statement may be given in evidence against third persons, provided that the reference to such third persons is not foreign to that portion of the statement which is against the interest of the declarant. But although the whole statement of a deceased person is admissible in evidence, the value which the Court will attach to such evidence will depend in each case upon a variety of circumstances. If the statement happens to be recorded in a document it must naturally possess greater value than when it depends upon the evidence of a witness who purports to have heard it. The Court in each case will also have to consider whether or not the statement in question bears on its face the appearances of truth, also the circumstances under which it came to be made, and whether or not the deceased person had a motive in making it or an object in naming the particular person whom he charges with complicity in the crime in question. —S. 33—Compliance with section.

———Strict proof of compliance with the provision is necessary specially in a murder trial—Reasons should be recorded before admission of evidence.

Per May Oung, J.—The power given by S. 33 requires to be exercised with great caution and the Court must insist on strict proof before holding that the requisite conditions have been satisfied. More especially is this necessary where a man is being tried for his life and the evidence sought to be put in is of signal importance. Moreover, it is essential that a Judge or Magistrate admitting such evidence should either in his judgment or preferably in a separate order record his reasons for doing so.

Per Lentaigne, J.—The section pre-supposes a consideration of the grounds for admission of the deposition prior to the admission of the evidence and if the grounds and reasons are recorded prior to the admission of the deposition as evidence, the order constitutes a more convincing proof of the considered adequacy of the grounds than a passage in a judgment subsequently written which in a case near the border line might easily assume the appearance of a subsequent statement of excuses for a previous ill-considered action. Held, a plaintiff, who accepts the defendants' books as deciding his rights to some extent, accepts them to that extent (unless he guards himself by apt words) as statements of the right mode of distributing the results of the recorded transactions, and not as a mere repository of figures like a calendar or price list. On the terms of this agreement the books cannot be divorced from the system of book-keeping of which they are the expression. The thing on which the percentage is to be reckoned is the profit of the branch as shown, and in showing a profit the mode of getting at it is as relevant as the final figure. ———Necessity of formal proof that books are kept in course of business has been dispensed with.

Under the old Evidence Act II of 1855, books to be admissible had to be proved to have been regularly kept in course of business. In the later Act I of 1872 the words "proved to have been" have dropped. This amounts to material alteration in the law. The legislature has dispensed with the necessity of any formal proof that the books were kept up in the regular course of business. It is a matter of intrinsic evidence as to whether the books in question were books of account and regularly kept in the regular course of business. The only limitation imposed by the statute is that the statement contained in the account books "shall not alone be sufficient to charge any one with liability." The value of the entries is corroborative and cannot be used as independent evidence to charge any person with liability. 18 All. 92; Rel. on; 27 Cal. 118, Ref.; 4 Bom. 576, Dist. (Young and Sen, JJ.). The law requires proof not only of account books generally but of each item, that is, in the interest of the person producing the books but with regard to admissions, i.e., entries against the producer's own pecuniary interest, the law dispenses with all proof save that the book has been kept by or under the authority of the producer. ———Irregularities in keeping account books affect its weight, but not admissibility—Regularly means according to certain rules or system.

The fact that the entries in an account book are not in chronological order, and that the roznama was written up once a week from memoranda on loose papers, which were destroyed, and that the khataoni was written up once a month, affect the weight of the evidence but not its admissibility.

According to S. 34, regularly or systematically means that the accounts are kept according to a set of rules or a system, whether the accountant has followed the rules or system closely or not. Nor is there anything in the section that says the system must be an elaborate or reliable one. Both those matters, the degree of excellence of the system, and the closeness with which it has been followed, affect the weight of the evidence of an entry, not its admissibility. The roughest memoranda of accounts kept generally according to the most elementary system, though often departing from it, are admissible in evidence, but would of course have no weight. ———Settlement map is more reliable than khasra.

Inasmuch as the Settlement map forms the original record of area of a field and the entry in the khasra is no more than its copy, the former is more reliable in case of conflict between the two in respect of the area. ———Record-of-rights, cadastral map and revenue survey map are prima facie correct.

Revenue Survey map should be properly judicially received in evidence as correct when made. 30 Cal. 291 (P. C.). A Cadastral Survey Map is a map of very great importance. The entry in the Record-of-rights operates in the same way between landlord and tenant, as between landlords of the same or of the neighbouring estates, or between tenant and tenant. The entry must be presumed to be correct until it is shown by evidence to be incorrect. (Das and Ross, JJ.). MAZHARUL EKBAL v. RAJAGOPAL LAL RAY BAHADUR AND M. ———Thak and survey maps are not conclusive proof.

It cannot be maintained as a matter of law that thak and survey maps constitute sufficient proof that what was part of the bed of the river at that time was included in the Permanent Settlement of 1793 ; and, no Court can properly act, on the assumption that in 1793 a state of things existed different from what appears from any evidence before the Court. ———Old public records—Statements in, should be presumed as true.

Evidence regarding the tribe of a person taken from public records for a series of years (here since 1852) and recorded in accordance with the requirements of the law, cannot in a pedigree case be disregarded for the reason that a particular link in the chain is not found, especially when there is no suggestion that entries in the records were false or that there was an existing reason why deliberately false entries should have been made. Statements in public documents are receivable to prove the facts stated on the general grounds that they were made by the authorised agents of the public in the —S. 36—Survey and Thak maps.

———Although the Thakbast map is a part of the thak survey, it is not meant to be and is not in fact a scientifically prepared plan, but merely a rough sketch, or at most, an unscientifically prepared plan showing the number and approximate position of the thak marks or dhuis for the guidance of the revenue surveyor who followed after, and who, having picked up and verified the thak marks indicated roughly in the Thakbast map prepared the revenue map by accurate observations made by expert surveyors with scientific instruments. Where it appears that he had the Thakbast map before him when he made his survey and prepared the revenue map then the revenue map must be accepted as shewing the result of the thak survey even more accurately than the Thakbast which was not intended to be scientifically accurate.

The signature of the Revenue Surveyor on a thak map means merely that he has satisfied himself that the boundary accepted and intended by the demarcation staff had been correctly picked up on the ground and correctly surveyed on the revenue survey map. (Dawson-Miller, C.J. and Mullick, J.). KESHBJI PITAMBAR v. SHASHI BHUSAN BANERJI. 96 I. C. 1027=1926 P.H.C.C. 210= A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 385.

———An entry in a thakbast map is not sufficient to enable a Court of fact to hold that the disputed lands were really included in an estate at the time of the Permanent Settlement. They may be good evidence as to what the boundary of a particular plot was at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The revenue survey maps are not conclusive and may be shown to be wrong, but in the absence of evidence to the contrary they may properly be judicially received as correct when made. It may also be clearly presumed that the boundaries mentioned in the maps were the boundaries which existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement but they do not go further and do not show that the lands measured and included in a particular mauza were settled, at the time of the Permanent Settlement, with a particular man. This has to be proved by evidence aliunde. The onus of proving that the lands shown in the survey map as belonging to a particular mauza were included in the Permanent Settlement of 1793, is upon the plaintiffs who affirm that such was the case. 30 Cal. 297; 30 I.A. 44, Foll. (Jwala Prasad and Ross, JJ.). There is no inflexible rule that a survey map must have preference over a thak map. The thak and the survey maps should, as a rule agree. 6 C. W. There is no general or definite rule making it incumbent upon the Court to follow either the one or the other. —S. 43—Essentials for relevancy.

Per Das, J.—A judgment or decree is not admissible in evidence under S. 43 unless as a fact in issue or as a relevant fact under other sections of the Act. Thus if A has obtained a decree for the possession of land against B, and C, B's son, murders A in consequence, the existence of the judgment is relevant as showing motive for the crime. So again, in a suit for malicious prosecution the judgment in the criminal proceeding is evidence to establish the fact of acquittal, the fact, namely, that the criminal proceedings terminated in favour of the plaintiff. A reference to the finding of a judgment may explain the character, of the party's possession and the nature of the enjoyment had in the property in suit and so the finding of a judgment may be referred to in all other cases where the record is matter of inducement or merely in-———Recitals in.

The Evidence Act does not make a finding of fact arrived at on the evidence before the Court in one case, evidence of the fact in another case when the parties are not the same. A recital, therefore, of a judgment not inter partes of a relevant fact is not admissible in evidence in another litigation, though the judgment may be used in evidence in certain circumstances as a fact in issue or as relevant fact or possibly as a transaction. ———Admissibility—Common defendant.

Section 43 excludes all judgments in a former suit as irrelevant if they are not inter partes unless the existence of such judgment is a fact in issue or is relevant under some other provision of the Act. It is immaterial if the defendant in both cases is the same and the decision of the Privy Council in 22 C. 533 is no authority for the general proposition that a judgment against a party can always be used against him in a subsequent suit by another person. 56 I.A. 119, Ref. to. (Suhrawardy and Costello, JJ.). —S. 44—Collusive decree.

———Fraud and collusion—Difference.

A collusive decree binds the parties thereto and is not a nullity. It is also binding on the representatives of the parties.

No doubt a decree can be avoided on the ground of fraud or collusion under S. 44 of the Evidence Act, but there is a great difference between fraud and collusion. A party who has been made the victim of a fraud can obviously avoid a decree on the ground that he has discovered the fraud subsequent to the decree which could not have been made a point of defence in the former litigation. On the other hand, the fact of collusion is a matter which must have been well known to both the parties and is a point which could and might have been raised before the decree was passed on the last occasion. A third party can undoubtedly avoid a decree on the ground that it has been obtained collusively, but a party to a collusive decree cannot avoid it on that ground : 11 Bom. 708; 20 Mad. 333; 31 Mad. 485 and 18 Mad. 378, Rel. on. (Sulaiman, J.). ———Limitations.

Some limitation must be put upon S. 44. Where the case merely turns on in effect, a re-heaing of the previous suit on subs tantially the same evidence, then the Court will not hear the second suit. On the other hand, in a proper case the Court has jurisdiction to set aside a decree which has been obtained by fraud practised on the Court.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 45—Handwriting.

If, for instance, the existence of certain evidence has been stoutly denied by one party, and the Court has been induced to frame its decree on the basis that that evidence did not exist, then, if that evidence is afterwards discovered and it is of such a nature, that, if it had been before the first Court, the probabilities are that the Court would have arrived at a different conclusion, then, it may be, when all the circumstances are looked at, that in that case the Court would set aside the original decree. 41 Mad. 743 (F. ———Comparison.

A comparison of handwriting is at all times, as a mode of proof hazardous and inconclusive, and especially when it is made by one not conversant with the subject and without such guidance as might be derived from the arguments of counsel and the evidence of experts.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 45—Hand writing—Proof.

Where the lower Appellate Court did not discuss either the oral evidence or the probabilities of the case, but simply relied upon what appeared to it to be a signature on the Will as a mere "tracing forgery" of some other signature of the testator and quashed the probate granted on a consideration of the evidence, by the first Court, Held, that the lower Appellate Court had erred: 49 Cal. 235; A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 12, Foll. (Sanderson, C.J. and Chakravarty, J.). AMBIKA CHARAN BARNA v. NARESWARI DASI. 85 I. C. 525=29 C.W.N. 75= A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 145.

———The opinion of an expert which is admissible against an accused is the opinion given by him at the trial. Opinion given for the purposes of a previous suit is not substantive evidence and when the accused has not the opportunity to cross-examine the expert regarding that opinion its evidential value is very little.

It is doubtful whether the opinion of an expert recorded for the purposes of a civil suit though proved in a criminal case is admissible at all at the latter trial: A. I. ———Penal Code, S. 193—Opinion of hand expert not examined on oath—Magistrate's own observation may be used as evidence.

Where in a trial for perjury in respect of a promissory note which the accused said on oath was in his handwriting, the Magistrate admitted in evidence the opinion of a handwriting expert against the accused without his being examined on oath and also had his own opinion after comparing the handwriting of the promissory note with various other handwritings, that the writing was not of the accused,

Held, that a conviction under S. 193 based on these materials is bad. The proposition that a Judge should not import his personal knowledge into his judgments and that if he wishes to rely on facts within his knowledge, he must go to the witness box and depose to them on oath is no doubt correct in the main, but it does not apply to facts of which a Judge is permitted to take judicial notice and nowhere in the Indian Evidence Act is it laid down that a Judge must not look at exhibits produced in Court or partly base his judgment on them. 11 W.R.Cr. 25, Foll. (MacColl, J.). Though it is not safe to convict an accused upon the sole testimony of an expert, yet the Court cannot refuse to convict a person on the evidence of a fingerprint expert, merely on the ground that it is unsafe to base a conviction upon such evidence: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 531; A. Although it is true that under the Evidence Act comparison of handwriting is legitimate enough and the view of persons competent to express opinions may be in many cases of considerable value, the opinions of those who have not carefully studied the art of caligraphy is not as a rule of very great utility. Indeed so uncertain and inexact is the science of the study of caligraphy that it has been for some years past the tendency to regard evidence even of experts as of somewhat inconclusive character. The mere fact that there is a resemblance between the signature alleged to be false and a signature admitted to be genuine does not carry great weight. If a signature is denied, the onus of proving it is on the party relying on its genuineness. (Bucknill, J.). BATAHU JHA v. PARMESHWAR RAI. 64 I.C. 234 (Pat.).

D. 491 and Odgers on Libel and Slander, 5th Edition, page 402). Similarly in Criminal prosecution where it is essential, in order to constitute the offence of defamation, that the person who makes or publishes the imputation complained of, should intend to harm, or know or have reason to believe that the imputation will harm the reputation of the person concerning whom it is made or published, the question what reputation the complainant had is relevant. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue : Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales, (1894) A. If the evidence of bad character is introduced in order to establish a relevant fact, the evidence of bad character is admissible. ———Acquiescence to reception of evidence.

Where the reception of secondary evidence is in direct contravention of an imperative prohibition of law, the fact that there was no objection cannot convert irrelevant evidence into relevant evidence. —S. 66—Absence of notice.

———Effect.

Under S. 66 of the Evidence Act secondary evidence may not be given unless the party proposing to give it as previously given to the party in whose possession or power the document is, such notice to produce it as is prescribed by law or as the Court considers reasonable. The omission to give notice to the persons said to possess the original is a fatal objection to the admission of secondary evidence. (Curgenven, J.). ———No distinction between documents to be used principally and collaterally exists.

There is no distinction between documents which are the basis of a suit and those whose production is required for a collateral purpose so far as their admissibility in evidence is in question. The direction in S. 68, Evidence Act is mandatory and draws no such distinction. (Dalal, J. C. and Neave, A. J.C.). ———Section 68 of the Evidence Act applies not only to cases where the document is attempted to be enforced to prove the legal right or relation it creates, but in a case where such document is sought to be proved for a collateral purpose.

This view is also supported by the imperative and stringent wording of S. 68 which does not permit the issue of the instrument as evidence for any purpose whatsoever unless and until it is proved in strict accordance with the provisions of the section. The rigour of the English law on which the present section is founded has been to a certain extent lessened by the proviso as contained in S. 70 of the Evidence Act. ———Where the mortgagor admitting his having signed the mortgage document but denied his having done so in the presence of attestors,

Held, that such admission does not amount to an admission of due execution within the meaning of S. 70.

Per Richardson, J.—Where an admission of execution is unqualified it may well be equivalent to an admission of due execution or a waiver of proof of due execution, but not where the admission is of the signature, coupled with the denial of his having done so in the presence of attestors.

Per Suhrawardy, J.—S. 70 provides an exception to the rule in S. 68, viz., where the executant admits that a document was executed by him, i.e., executed according to law, no further proof of execution is necessary. It thus qualifies S. 68 of the Act but does not affect or control S. 59 of the T. P. Act. ———Comparison.

In applying the provision of S. 73 of the Evidence Act, it is important not to lose sight of its exact terms. It does not sanction the comparison of any two documents but requires that the writing with which the comparison is to be made or the standard writing as it may be called, shall be admitted or proved to have been written by the person to whom it is attributed and next the writing to be compared with the standard or in other words, the disputed writing must purport to have been written by the same person, that is to say, the writing itself must state or indicate that it was written by that person. A comparison of handwriting is at all times, as a mode of proof, hazardous and inconclusive, and especially when it is made by one not conversant with the subject and without such guidance as might be derived from the arguments of counsel and the evidence of experts. A comparison of writings has consequently been deemed a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great caution. Although from the dissimilarity of signatures a Court may legitimately draw the inference that a particular signature is not genuine because it varies from an admittedly genuine signature, yet resemblance of two signatures affords no safe foundation that one of them is genuine. ———Grant—Executant's authority—Surrounding circumstances.

The application of S. 90 does not justify the inference that the documents, which are established to be genuine, were in fact executed by persons of the requisite authority, but when a grant has been in operation for a long series of years, it may be impossible to adduce direct evidence of authority. In such a contingency the Court may draw an inference from all the surrounding circumstances.

Where the grantee and his successors in interest from generation to generation had been in possession for more than 70 years and the grantor had taken no steps to eject the grantees,

Held, that the burden shifts upon the Zamindar plaintiff to prove how he came to acquiesce in the long possession of the grantee and his successors, and if no evidence, is forthcoming from his side the grants must be presumed to have been made by persons who possessed the requisite authority. Though the mere fact of a certain document having been produced from a Court where it had been filed does not necessarily bring that document within the requirements of S. 90, yet, the question depends upon the circumstances of each particular case.

The document was 54 years old and was submitted to the Magistrate and Collector with the express purpose that he might take the necessary steps in order to bring the estate under the management of the Court of Wards. At that time only one of the attesting witnesses was said to have been alive. Yet no further attempt was made to bring the Will into Court till some ten years later when even that witness was dead. There was no reasonable explanation about the delay after 1910 in making the application for probate. There was no evidence as to the custody of the Will before 1907, ———Genuineness of even unregistered document can be presumed from its copy after careful consideration of circumstances.

The Court can presume the genuineness even of an unregistered document thirty years old from a copy of such document, if the original is proved to have been duly executed, and further it is also proved that the original is since lost. But such a presumption can only be made after a careful consideration of all the circumstances of the case.

A document which purported to be the Will was produced in Court in 1897, was referred to in the registered deed of gift in 1902, was made the basis of the public adoption in 1903 and was referred to in the deed of adoption. It was admitted to be genuine in litigation in 1901 and in other litigations from 1903 to 1909, and mutation of names was made in the revenue Court on the basis of the adoption in 1910. Yet since 1879 when testator died until 1923 when this suit was filed, no suggestion was made by any one that a will had been forged or that the will produced in 1897 was a forged document. It was only when 44 speculators combined to take 192 shares of half the estate that the suit was launched,

Held, that after a careful consideration of the whole of the evidence it ought to be accepted as proved that a will was executed and that the genuineness of that will would be presumed from the copy of it: 16 Cal. 753 (P. Where the tenant wrote to the landlord to grant a lease in pursuance of an oral conversation and the landlord sent a reply which in law amounted to an agreement to lease but which was rendered inadmissible for want of registration and the tenant thereupon sought to fall back on the prior oral agreement, ———Grant reduced to form of document—Secondary evidence inadmissible where document not shown to have been lost.

Under S. 91 the only evidence as to a grant when it has been reduced to the form of a document is the document itself unless secondary evidence as to its contents is admissible. Only Cl. ———Terms of contract, originally made by parol, reduced to writing—Oral evidence is not admissible.

The moment an oral contract is reduced to writing it is not open to any of the parties thereafter to seek to prove the terms of the contract referring to the original oral agreement and S. 91, Evidence Act, applies not only to cases where the contract is brought about or concluded by the writing, but also where the contract having been originally made by parol is subsequently reduced to writing. When the parties reduce the terms of a contract to writing, it clearly indicates the contemplation of the parties that the terms would be reduced to a form where there could be no question at all as to what the terms were and the undoubted policy of the law is that whenever parties have taken such precaution it is the document itself that must be produced and proved as evidence of the contract subject of course to any rules as to secondary evidence. ———Contract—Construction—Mercantile contract—Evidence of usage in particular locality is admissible only if necessary to explain ambiguous terms—If such usage is repugnant to the terms of written contract it is inadmissible.

Where ambiguous terms or phrases are found in a mercantile contract evidence of usage is admissible to explain the meaning of the expressions in the particular trade or locality and where a contract is silent in respect of some incidental term or condition which, according to the course of business established in a particular trade it is customary to find included in such a contract, evidence of the custom is admissible to prove that such term or condition formed part of the contract, unless the incorporation of the term or condition in the contract will have the effect of introducing something repugnant to or inconsistent with the tenor of the written agreement. But where the parties to a contract have expressed the agreement at which they have arrived in a written document the terms of which are capable of a reasonable interpretation, according to the natural meaning of the words that are used, a trade usage which, if it regulated the rights and obligation of the parties, would alter fundamentally the nature and character of the contract as expressed in the written agreement, can neither determine nor affect the rights and obligations of the parties engaged in the transaction; and, as it is inconsistent with the terms of the written agreement evidence of such an usage is inadmissible: Humprey v. Dale, (1857) 7 E. and B. 266 and Mollet v. Robinson, L.R. 5 C.P. 646, Relied on.

Where plaintiff contracted to supply certain goods to the defendants and the indent provided: "I the undersigned, request you to purchase yourselves or through your agent on my account and risk the whole or any part of the undermentioned goods on the terms and conditions stated below",

Held, under the indent the relationship of principal and agent was created between the defendant and the plaintiff; and unless the defendant assented to some other mode of performance, it was the duty of the plaintiff under the indent to create privity of contract between the defendant and the foreign supplier for the purchase of the indent,

Held, further, that the usage that a merchant who under an indent agrees to purchase goods from abroad for and on account of a dealer, "C.I.F. no commission," is entitled to purchase the goods from the supplier as a principal on any terms that he may arrange, and to resell the goods to the dealer upon the terms of the indent, the difference between the price at which the merchant buys from the supplier and the price at which he sells to the dealer being his remuneration for obtaining the goods for the dealer, would be wholly inconsistent with the terms of the indent and would be inadmissible in evidence whether defendant was aware or ignorant of it: Mollet v. Robinson, (1870) L.R. 5 C.P. 646 and May & Hart v. Angele, (1898) 14 T.

———Non-compliance with S. 360, Cr. P. C. does not make record entirely inadmissible in evidence.

The provisions of S. 360 are mandatory. But non-compliance does not legally result in the total inadmissibility of the record of evidence and in the absence of any definite provision of law entailing inadmissibility, each case of non-compliance must be considered by the Court on its own merits and the document which purports to be the record can be admitted, but without the presumption laid down in S. 80 of the Evidence Act, and, therefore, open to question by the defence and appraisal by the Court.

The law itself does not expressly lay down that the least failure to comply with the provisions of S. 360 renders the whole document inadmissible. Where, therefore, there has been an attempt by the presiding officer to comply with its provisions and to secure the accuracy of the record of evidence, the provisions of S. 80 do not lead to complete exclusion of the document, and the Court is bound to admit under S. 5, but it is open to each side to adduce evidence as to its faithfulness or otherwise and as to the degree of presumption under S. 80 and the weight to be attached to it. 46 Cal. 895, Foll. (Madgavkar, A.J.C.). —S. 92—Consideration.

———Want of consideration or failure of consideration may be proved—But party cannot prove that amount of consideration agreed upon was more or less than that stated in document.

It is open to a party to prove want of consideration or failure of consideration or a difference in kind of consideration, but it is not open to him to prove a variation in the amount of consideration. The difference in kind, that is the consideration mentioned, must be wholly absolute; a mere omission to mention some portion of the consideration will not come within the proviso, since such an omission is clearly a variation in the terms of the contract. Recitals then as to the kind of consideration or as to the actual payment of consideration may be shown to be false. Recitals as to the amount of consideration cannot be shown to be false, since the amount of consideration is clearly a term of the contract. It is therefore not open to parties to the documeut to give evidence that the amount of consideration agreed upon was more or less than what is stated in the document. 22 All. 370 (P.C.); 33 All. 340; A. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 92—Discharge.

———Suit on mortgage—Mortgagor alleging compromise and payment in pursuance, evidence of discharge inadmissible.

Plaintiff brought a suit on a registered mortgage passed by defendant. The defendant contended that there was a compromise in the month of January, 1923, between the plaintiff and defendant by which it was agreed that on the defendant paying Rs. 1,500 more to the plaintiff the entire claim for interest due till the end of January, 1923, would be discharged and the balance of interest would be remitted; that accordingly on 1st February, 1923, the defendant paid Rs. 1,500 to the plaintiff in full satisfaction of the claim for interest up to the end of January, 1923.

Held, that the alleged discharge was based entirely upon the alleged oral agreement, and unless the oral agreement is proved the discharge could not be established and the evidence of the oral adjustment being inadmissible under S. 92 (4), the alleged discharge was also inadmissible. ———Transactions evidenced by instrument—Evidence regarding attendant circumstances is admissible under S. 92.

Oral evidence of intention of parties is inadmissible. But evidence under S. 92 (b), Evidence Act, regarding the attendant circumstances is admissible: A.I.R.1924 P.C. 226 and A.I.R. 1925 P. ———Deed—Construction—Sale or mortgage—Two documents executed almost simultaneously—One a deed of sale and another an agreement to re-sale—Surrounding circumstances and intention must be looked to for deciding whether they constituted a mortgage.

When the question with reference to two documents, e.g., A and B executed almost simultaneously, one purporting to be a sale and the other an agreement to re-sell, is, whether the transaction is a mortgage or whether it is merely a sale with an agreement to repurchase, the case has to be decided on the instruments and the language employed in them having regard to the surrounding circumstances. No oral evidence is admissible to prove the real meaning or intention of the parties and not even the subsequent conduct of the parties can be looked at or regarded for the purpose.

Where it was found that at the time of execution of the documents A and B the property was impending sale, that it was sold under the first document A for comparatively low price, that the vendors under A were plaintiffs and one P a prior mortgagee while the persons who were entitled to the benefit of the contract under B were only the plaintiffs, that the actual possession of the property was only with the vendors even before the execution of a muchilika by plaintiff in favour of the defendant the opposite party, that there was no evidence of any bargaining for the price of the property, there was no reliable evidence with regard to the inspection of the property or the examination of the title deeds before concluding of the transaction, that the creditor while speaking of the amount paid always used the expression "advance the amount" and it was further found that the document B namely the agreement to re-sell provided "after the expiration of the said period you will claim no right or privilege whatever to this agreement or to the properties detailed below and I shall be in undisputed possession of the said properties,"

Held, that the only conclusion that would be in consonance with what may be regarded as the real intention of the parties was that the transaction was only a mortgage and that the sale was merely by way of security for the amount that was advanced. The case is similar to one in which a description of property intended to be conveyed in a particular deed has been wrongly entered. When parties have come to a contract but have failed to express themselves correctly, if a mistake is a real one and mutual, and can be established by satisfactory proofs, a Court of equity will reform written instrument so as to make it conformable to the precise intent of the parties.

The combined effect of S. 92, Cl. (a), Prov. (1) and of S. 31, Specific Relief Act is to entitle either party to a contract, whether plaintiff or defendant, to protect his right by proving a mistake in contract, for example, mistake in the description of the property sold by giving wrong survey number to same: 39 Mad. 792, Rel. on.

———Sale-deed—Certain property sold omitted in sale-deed by mutual mistake—Rectification not sought within Limitation—Oral evidence can be admitted to prove sale.

Though a remedy by way of rectification of an instrument by a suit is open to a party, when through fraud or mutual mistake of the parties an instrument in writing does not truly express their intention; this does not mean that if, notwithstanding the mutual mistake, the property actually intended to be transferred has passed to the possession of the vendee, the vendee's title to the property can be challenged simply because the instrument has not been rectified within three years from the date of the discovery of the mistake by the vendee. It will always be open to the vendee, if his title is challenged by the vendor, to show that there was a mistake in the instrument and that, as a matter of fact, the property in his possession was intended to be transferred to him. In fact the vendee is entitled to lead oral evidence to show the mistake in the instrument. The mere failure of the vendee, to have the instrument rectified within three years from the date of the discovery of the mistake, cannot have the effect of extinguishing his title to the property intended to be conveyed to him, though not properly described in the sale-deed: 28 C.L.J. 197, Rel. on. (Iqbal Ahmad, J.). ———Plaintiff mortgaging land with possession but without registered deed—Oral evidence to prove mortgage is not allowed but he may sue on title for possession on condition of returning consideration money.

Where a plaintiff alleges that possession of immovable property has been given to the defendant as security for a loan of Rs. 100 or upwards, but without any registered instrument, no oral evidence is admissible to prove the transaction. There is a marked distinction in these cases between those relating to an inchoate mortgage and an inchoate sale. In the latter it is open to the party in possession of land who has bought without obtaining a registered deed of conveyance to sue for specific performance of a contract to sell. But there is no right to sue for specific performance possessed by a mortgagor who has given his land in mortgage without securing his right of redemption by a registered deed of mortgage. 8 B.L.R. 334 (F.B.) and 2 R. 285 (F.B.), Expl. In such a case it is, however, open to the plaintiffs to bring a suit based solely on their title. If the defendant admits their title and if he fails to prove the contract to sell which he alleges, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree. That decree must be made conditional on repaying the money advanced not with the intention of granting practically a decree for redemption but by ordering repayment on equitable grounds. The reason why different principles apply to the admissibility of evidence to prove a contract to mortgage and a contract to sell is that in the latter the defendant is entitled to claim specific performance and in the former case he is not. The true construction to be placed upon S. 92, proviso (3) is that the provisions thereof are inapplicable in a case in which any obligation under the written contract has attached, and that if the effect of the alleged contemporaneous oral agreement is merely to suspend the performance of the obligations contained in the written contract, evidence of such oral agreement cannot be admitted. On the other hand, it is permissible to adduce evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement under which the parties to the written contract agree that until the happening of a certain event no obligation whatever under the written agreement should attach, or, in other words, that until the condition precedent has been fulfilled, the written agreement should be and remain inoperative and of no effect. 2 All. 598, Rel. on. (Page, J.). ———Agreement complete in itself—Oral evidence is not allowed to supplement it.

A contract for sale of land was entered into on 15th January, 1920, by means of a writing appearing in the books of one Chanbasappa. It was signed by both parties and witnessed. The defendant said that the agreement appearing in the book did not contain the whole of the agreement arrived at between the parties but there was an oral agreement that if anybody else per chance offered more than Rs. 500 to the 1st defendant above the agreed amount before the expiry of the period in the agreement the agreement with the plaintiff was to be treated as null and void.

Held, that the evidence about the oral agreement is not admissible.

It may very well be that a writing may be an imperfect agreement of which a Court cannot decree specific performance, but if on the face of it contains all the terms which would entitle it to be considered as a perfect agreement which could be enforced, then undoubtedly no parol evidence could be adduced so as to alter or add to its terms unless they came within one of the provisos of S. 92. ———Defendant leased his absolute occupancy field to the plaintiff for a term of seven years without landlord's consent: the landlord brought a suit against them to cancel the lease. As the plaintiff and defendant were bound to fail as against the landlord, the lease was given up and in its place the defendant, the tenant, executed in favour of the plaintiff, his sub-tenant, a series of six bonds, undertaking in lieu of the lease to pay off the lease money by giving an instalment of 12 khandis of wheat every year. The defendant pleaded that the real arrangement between the parties was that in order to pay off the lease money the defendant should cultivate his own tenancy land but should give half the produce every year to the plaintiff who had been his sub-tenant, and that the plaintiff should pay him half the rent every year. It was alleged that in order that the landlord should not be aware of this arrangement, the bonds were executed in the form in which they stand. The bonds are described in the defendant's pleadings as "security" for the real oral agreement.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 92—Oral agreement.

Held, that the agreement "was not a condition precedent" for the enforcement of the bonds nor can the bonds be regarded as "security" for the carrying out of the oral agreement, and that the attempt to show that the agreement was not what it purported to be but something different is directly against the provisions of S. 92 and is not covered by proviso (3). —S. 92—Surrounding circumstances.

———Oral agreement showing nature of document is not admissible but Court can look into circumstances if document is of doubtful tenor.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 92—Surrounding circumstances.

Proof of an oral agreement to show the nature of a document is excluded by S. 92. Such proof cannot be admitted under proviso 6. All that Court has to do is that if the document is of doubtful tenor, it should, in construing it look into surrounding circumstances. A contemporaneous oral agreement contradicting the terms of a document cannot be admitted under the proviso: A. I. R. 1924 P.C. 226; A. I. R. 1924 P.C. 75; A. I. ———Evidence as to circumstances themselves is inadmissible.

In construing a document evidence so far as it relates to prove how the language of the document is related to the existing facts and surrounding circumstances is only admissible and not the circumstances themselves as elucidating the document: 22 All. 149 and A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 207, Ref. (Suhrawardy and Garlick, JJ.). SISIR KUMAR MALLIK v. NARAN CHANDRA MALLIK. 119 I. C. 803=33 C.W.N. 591=A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 548.

———Surrounding circumstances can be taken into consideration to find true meaning and effect of the transaction.

S. 92 merely prescribes rule of evidence; it does not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances: A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 75, Foll. (Findlay, J.C.). MUMMASING RAJAPUTA v. NARAINSING. 107 I. C. 658=A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 91.

———Evidence of circumstances led only to throw light on the meaning and not to change the nature of the document.

Under proviso 6 to S. 92, evidence of circumstances surrounding a document is admissible only for the purpose of throwing light on its meaning and it would not be permissible to consider the surrounding circumstances with a view to holding that a document, which on the face of it was a sale-deed, was intended to operate as a mortgage: A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 501, Foll. (Prideaux, A.J.C.). KALURAM v. GAJASA. 107 I. C. 201=A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 182.

———Oral evidence for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties to the deeds is not admissible, being excluded by the enactment in S. 92, yet it does not enact that no statement of fact written instrument is to be contradicted by oral evidence. Extrinsic evidence of circumstances is admissible to show the relation of the written language to existing facts. (Maung Ba, J.). ———Circumstances surrounding a document may be proved only to make its meaning clear and not to prove it to be something else than what it purports to be.

The language of the proviso is rather vague. It is true that evidence of the circumstances, surrounding a document is admissible; but it is admissible only for the purpose of throwing light on its meaning. It would not be permissible to consider the surrounding circumstances with a view to holding that a document which on the face of it is a sale-deed was intended to operate as a mortgage. There must be some limit to the suggestion that the surrounding circumstances can always be scrutinised so as to enable the Court to alter or change ———Promissory note—Endorsee can prove his limited liability by oral evidence.

Lobo, A. J. C.—It is open to the endorser of a negotiable instrument to prove that the endorsee orally agreed to recover the amount of the pro-note from the estate of the drawer only.

Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.—A bill or note is required by law to be in writing and so the supervening contracts thereon such as acceptance or endorsement. It, therefore, follows that the contracts of the immediate parties to them are subject to the ordinary rule as to written contracts. The contract, by an endorser of a bill or note, however, stands on a different footing. It is not fully expressed in writing on the document itself, and certain terms are said to be affixed to it either by the Law Merchant or by statute. There is, therefore, more room for admission of parol evidence as to what is the contract represented by the transaction. Where the endorsement is silent, it undoubtedly raises a prima facie presumption of law that the liabilities, inter se, of successive endorsers are that every prior endorser must indemnify a subsequent one. But this is only a presumption and not an express term of the contract reduced to writing. And, therefore, the rules as to exclusion of parol evidence crystallized in S. 92, Indian Evidence Act, do not apply. As between immediate endorsers such presumption may, in the absence of any other well-recognized rule of law or statutory provision ———Assignment of decree—Oral evidence is inadmissible to vary term as to consideration payable but is admissible to contradict recital as to amount paid actually.

The law allows the parties to a deed to show by oral evidence that a recital of fact in a deed is not true. But a recital which is a term of the contract between the parties cannot be contradicted in that manner.

A deed of assignment of a portion of a mortgage decree recited that the consideration for the assignment was a certain amount and that out of that a certain sum was paid in advance on the day of the execution of the deed of assignment,

Held, that evidence was admissible for the purpose of showing that out of the sum stated to have been paid only a portion had been actually paid,

Held, further, that oral evidence to show that the consideration for the assignment was less than that recited in the deed, was not admissible. (Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.). LODD GOVINDOSS KRISHNADOSS v. MUTHIAH CHETTY. A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 660=48 M.L.J. 721.

For the purposes of S. 92 it is immaterial whether the parties to a document appear as executants on the face thereof. Where a landlord gives a receipt for rent received from the tenant, the tenant is a party to the receipt though his name does not appear on the face of the receipt.

Recitals in receipts as to the period for which the payments were made do clearly evidence one of the terms of the contract and cannot be contradicted by oral evidence. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.). KUNWAR BEHARI LAL v. KALKA. 77 I.C. 695=25 O.C. 282=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 45.

Plaintiff sued the defendants on the agreement to reconvey the land. The lower Court held that the plaintiff was barred by S. 92 from giving evidence to prove the agreement.

Held, that if the question related to the conveyance to A, then evidence was not admissible under S. 92. But as the plaintiff was not a party to the sale-deed executed by A in favour of the defendants, S. 92 did not apply and did not debar him from proving the agreement that he set up. A.I.R. 1917 P. ———Custom that when due date falls on a holiday contract may be performed on the next working day can be proved.

In the absence of statutory provision or trade custom or usage to that effect, the fact that the performance of a contract falls due on a holiday does not alter the rights of the parties. Richardson v. Godard, (1859) 23 Howard 28; 15 Bom. 338, Foll. Such mercantile usage, though it needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity or the notoriety of custom, must be so well known and acquiesced in that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient tacitly imported by the parties into their contract. 7 M.I.A. 263 (P.C.) and Gibson v. Small, (1853) 4 H.L.C. 353, Foll. Consequently the usage of which evidence is received must not be repugnant to or inconsistent with the written contract. Brown v. Byrne, (1854) 3 El. and Bl. 703 and Ross v. Shaw, (1917) 2 Ir. But in order that the material incidence which it is sought to annex should fall within the exception of repugnancy, the incident must be such as if expressed in the written contract, would make it insensible or inconsistent or thoroughly unreasonable. (English cases referred).

The mere fact that the usage varies the apparent contract is not of itself sufficient to exclude the evidence, for it is manifestly impossible to add any material incident to the written terms of a contract without altering its effect, more or less. —S. 92—Variation of terms.

———By proviso 4, oral evidence, varying or modifying terms of a written contract, is entirely inadmissible.

Under proviso 4, in certain cases, a subsequent oral agreement to modify any previous contract may be proved, but this is not permitted where the law requires that the terms of the contract should be reduced into writing, as in the case of a mortgage or where the terms of the contract have been registered. By proviso 4 oral evidence is entirely inadmissible to vary or modify the terms of such a contract.

Where the defendants pleaded that some time before any payment was made, an oral agreement with the plaintiffs was reached by which they (plaintiffs) were to receive, in full satisfaction of the mortgage deed, less money than was due to them under the mortgage bond.

Held, that the oral agreement set up on behalf of the defendant is calculated te vary the terms of the written instrument by trying to establish that although the plaintiffs were entitled to something under the terms of the mortgage, they were not entitled to it by virtue of a subsequent oral agreement, and that S. 92 was a bar to the plea. 42 Mad. 41 and 119 I.C. 92, Rel. on. (Mukerji, Banerji and Young, JJ.). ———Interpretation—Oral evidence to prove satisfaction of debt by part payment and remission of reminder is admissible.

Section 63, Contract Act, has nothing to do with the interpretation of S. 92, Evidence Act. In some cases, where the promisee exercises any of his privileges given him under S. 63, Contract Act with the consent of the promisor the act may amount to a variance, etc., of the terms of the original contract and in that case, unless the variance is made by a document in writing, evidence would not be admissible to prove the fact. For example, where the mortgagee agrees to extend the time for payment, if the promise is merely oral and if the mortgage is by a registered document, the promise cannot be proved by oral evidence. But in the case of a satisfaction of the debt or remission of a part of the debt there is no contradicting, or varying, or adding to, or subtracting from the terms of the contract, and oral evidence may be adduced to prove the payment of a part of the debt and remission of the balance. For in that case, it would not be the plea of the mortgagor that the mortgagee is not entitled to the whole of his money. On the other hand his plea would amount to this, that although the mortgagee was entitled to the whole of his money he, in consideration of prompt payment of a certain amount (and for other possible considerations) agreed to accept a part in satisfaction of the full promise. 44 Bom.55, Diss.from; A.I.R. 1926 All. 445, Expl.: A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 522; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 233 and A.I.R. 1926 All. 693, Discussed. (Mukerji, Banerji and Young, JJ.). ———A document which cannot be said to be a variation of a mortgage bond is admissible.

A leased certain property to B and also executed a mortgage of the same property to him. The mortgage bond contained a covenant that unless credit entry was made therein in respect of payments of amounts which might be made on account of the bond, a statement that they had been made otherwise would not be sustainable. On the same date B executed a varthamanam to A agreeing to pay a certain sum out of rents for charity, to pay the kist, and to credit the balance of the rents towards the bond. A alleged that B failed to pay the amount for charity and assessment due in respect of the land and that by crediting the rents as provided for in the varthamanam towards the mortgage-bond, the bond was fully discharged and therefore he instituted the suit for taking accounts in respect of the lease and the mortgage bond, for the recovery of the land and some other reliefs. The Trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that the varthamanam was inadmissible in evidence,

Held, that the varthamanam was admissible in evidence as it cannot be said to be a variation of the mortgage bond.

—S. 96—Latent ambiguity.

——Extrinsic evidence is admissible.

When an instrument appears on its face to be free from ambiguity but upon the endeavour being made to apply it to the persons or things indicated, it transpires that the words are equally applicable to two or more persons or to two or more things there is a latent ambiguity. In such a case extrinsic evidence has created the ambiguity and extrinsic evidence is admissible to resolve it and direct evidence of intention may be given for the purpose of ascertaining which of the several persons or things to whom the words are applicable was intended to be connoted. ——Conflict between recitals and diagram forming part of description of property—Rule that recitals will prevail does not apply—Ambiguity—Evidence to solve it is admissible whether it is patent or latent.

Where, in a grant of land there is a repugnancy between the terms of the grant and any plan or diagram, the general rule is that the former will prevail. But where the plan of boundary is a part and parcel of the description itself, the general rule ceases to apply

Where a deed of conveyance contained an ambiguity as to the description of the property conveyed one portion of it referring to the entire house and another portion, only to a portion of the house but both read together did apply correctly either to the whole house or to a portion of it,

Held, the case is within S. 97 of the Act and extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of solving the question whether by the description of the property taken as a whole the intention is to convey the house in its entirety or only a portion of it. The principle that when an instrument contains an ambiguity, evidence of user under it may be given to show the sense in which the parties used the language employed, applies to a modern as well as to an ancient instrument, and where the ambiguity is patent as well as where it is latent. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), Ss. 101 to 103—Admission—Execution.

—Ss. 101 to 103—Admission—Execution.

———Admission by one defendant—Not conclusive against others.

Where one of the defendants admits the execution of the bond alleged to be executed by all the defendants jointly, in respect of a partnership, such an admission is not conclusive, but it amounts to presumptive proof of the allegation of the plaintiff, and, therefore, the burden should be placed on the defendants to prove the non-existence of a partnership. ———Suit for redemption—Mortgagee in long possession—Plea of outright sale—Onus to prove how possession passed is on plaintiff

A person effected a simple mortgage of the land in favour of another person and his deceased wife by a registered deed. About a year later, the mortgagor was unable to pay the interest on the mortgage and possession of the land was given to the mortgagee. Mortgagors' heirs sued for redemption of the mortgage of the land which was in possession of the mortgagee for over 20 years. Mortgagee alleged that the land was made over to him outright by way of sale.

Held, that the burden of proof as to the nature of the original transaction rests on the plaintiff. If they cannot prove how possession passed, no presumption that the possession was not adverse can be drawn. A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 377 and A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 33 (F.B.), Expl.; 5 L.B.R. 40, Doubted.

———Defective title of mortgagor—Mortgagee's knowledge of—Onus on mortgagor.

The burden of proving mortgage's knowledge is upon the mortgagor.

A joint family consisted of the plaintiff, his brother's widow and another brother's daughter-

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), Ss. 101 to 103—Affirmation of fact—Knowledge.

The two former for family necessity mortgaged the whole property suppressing the fact that the third had any interest in the property. On the death of the latter the plaintiff sued for one-third of the property, representing the interest of the daughter of his brother, who did not join in the mortgage, from the assignee of the mortgagee who had brought the property at the mortgage sale in execution of the decree against plaintiff and his brother's wife,

Held, if mortgagee did not know then the mere fact that the assignee who claims through mortgagee may have known the fact as to the existence of interest of plaintiff's brother's daughter, does not prevent his getting a good title to the properties and relying on the estoppel which mortgagee could have set up against any claim by plaintiff in any suit. As soon as the mortgage-deed was produced which contained a representation with regard to a share in the property to which the mortgagor later on obtained title, the burden was no longer on the mortgagee or his assignee to establish that he did not know the true position but the burden of proof shifted on the mortgagors and those claiming under them to show mortgagee's knowledge of the true facts. ———Execution of mortgage admitted—Consideration recited but denied onus on mortgagor—Gross inadequacy—Inference.

Where a mortgagor admits execution of a mortgage-deed, it is for him to prove that he has not received the consideration recited in the deed. The mere fact that he was a reckless borrower does not affect the question of onus. Gross inadequacy of consideration can lead a Court to the conclusion that the party did not understand what he was doing. (Abdul Raoof and Moti Sagar, JJ.). JIWA RAM v. JHANDA SINGH. 92 I.C. 346 (Lah.).

———As against purchaser of equity of redemption, mortgagee has to prove consideration—Onus how discharged.

A mortgagee as against a purchaser of equity of redemption from the original mortgagor has to prove by affirmative evidence the validity of the consideration and also that it had passed from the creditor to the debtor. The mere admission of the debtor in the mortgage-bond does not shift the onus as it would have been if the suit had been brought against the mortgagor himself alone. He has to give the best evidence possible that the bond was for a really good consideration.

Where the bond debts which formed part of the consideration were debts going back to about forty years from the time when the suit was brought and the plaintiff was able to produce two of the numerous attesting witnesses to the bond, who not only proved the mortgage-bond but also stated that the consideration for the bond was admitted by the debtor before them, and there was practically no effective cross-examination of those witnesses on this point,

Where an unregistered document, the execution of which is admitted or proved, contains an admission or recital of the payment of the consideration, the onus lies on the person executing the document to prove that he did not receive the consideration. ———Suspicious circumstances—Onus of proving accounts to be fictitious is not on defendant.

The family firm of which the debtor was once a member was once the richest firm, so much so that the plaintiffs themselves were indebted to it to the extent of over three lakhs of rupees, and all their property was mortgaged in favour of it for that debt. Another suspicious circumstance was that they had this debt set off against their own debts. Secondly, there was the fact that they brought the suit after the debtor's death though he lived for more than five years after the date of the last balance. They kept quiet for all this long period and did not even obtain fresh acknowledgments from the deceased member year by year which money-lenders generally do to charge compound interest and strengthen the evidential value of accounts. If the accounts were wholly or partly fictitious the deceased member alone could prove the same.

Held, the belated suit and non-renewal of acknowledgments strongly point to the conclusion that the plaintiffs could not trust the debtor and did not consider it safe to see him. Under all these circumstances the onus of proving that the account was fictitious did not lie upon the defendants. (Broadway and Zafar Ali, JJ.). DHAG MAL DAYA RAM v. GARINIJU MAL. 83 I. Held, that all that the defendant admitted was that his signature appeared on the document filed and the case to be decided was not whether the plaintiff had been proved to have committed forgery but whether the plaintiff had proved that he lent the Rs. 1,300, to the defendant as he alleged and the burden of proving this loan rested on the plaintiff. ———Recited in mortgage-deed—Presumption may be rebutted by even circumstantial evidence.

In a mortgage suit for sale, the initial presumption arising, under S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act and from the acknowledgment admitting the receipt of the entire consideration, can be rebutted even by circumstantial evidence. And when it is thus rebutted the burden of evidence shifts on to the mortgagee to show that full consideration did actually pass.

In a mortgage suit for sale the execution of the mortgage document was established and further the mortgagor had made an acknowledgment admitting the receipt of the entire consideration as well as the fact that there were hundis and promissory notes executed by him which had been set off or for the payment of which money had been left in the hands of mortgagee. But the mortgagor was a very young man of profligate habits and the mortgagee was in a position to dominate his will and to exercise undue influence over him. ———In a mortgage suit for sale, the initial presumption arising, under S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act and from the acknowledgment admitting the receipt of the entire consideration, can be rebutted even by circumstantial evidence. And when it is thus rebutted the burden of evidence shifts on to the mortgagee to show that full consideration did actually pass.

In a mortgage suit for sale the execution of the mortgage document was established and further the mortgagor had made an acknowledgment admitting the receipt of the entire consideration as well as the fact that there were hundis and promissory notes executed by him which had been set off or for the payment of which money had been left in the hands of mortgagee.
